Quarterback Don Majkowski is an intent listener as head coach Lindy Infante reviews play options and possibilities during a timeout discussion.

IT'S TURNABOUT TIME

Lee Remmel
Editorial Director

Socrates, the Greek philosopher who pre-dated the origin of football by roughly 2,000 years, once had some sage advice for his fellow man.

He said, with great economy of verbiage, "Know thyself."

In 1991, curiously enough, Lindy Infante is urgently commending the identical message to his Green Bay Packers.

The Packers' erudite head coach is convinced it is the key to triggering a turnabout in their artistic fortunes, following an unexpected dip to a 6-10 record in 1990—a sobering experience in the wake of a memorable 10-and-6 season a year earlier.

Looking to the imposing challenge ahead while addressing Packer stockholders at the corporation's annual meeting in May, Infante said, "The most important thing is recognizing what type of football team we are—that we're a team that has to play its very best to be a competitive football team, and that we have to be playing together and everybody being very willing to do whatever is asked of them and, in whatever role they're asked to fill, be comfortable in that role.

"I think a lot of the players forgot one basic thing (last season)," he said, "and lost in all of that was the basic idea of who we are and what kind of football team we are.

"Two years ago, we were a football team that won four games by one point, won another game in overtime and created a 10-6 season. And I think what it did is it pointed out what a fine line there is in this business between being a championship caliber or a contending football team, and being just another football team in the National Football League.

"And so I think expectations were exceedingly high coming off that 10-and-6 year. All through that last offseason period, every place that I went, every place that I spoke, every time I was out in public, any place, it was like everybody—all they said was, 'All you're going to have to do now is to get in the playoffs this year and go to the Super Bowl,' and that would be the next natural step.

"Well, it's not quite that easy. We had some things that happened to us this last year that we were not good enough to overcome.

"I was not one to douse expectations because it is a firm belief that I have—I will never change this opinion: That if you don't have expectations that are high, if you don't set your goals high, you'll never obtain anything that you really want to have. Then you are strictly operating by chance.

"And so I was hoping that the expectations for last season would spill over into the football team and make people work a little harder and it would actually give us something to shoot for. But, in turn, it was a little bit of a negative when it was all said and done."

Great expectations, Infante went on to note in a thoroughgoing analysis, were not solely responsible for the Packers' 1990 tribulations.

"There were a lot of reasons why we were not capable of living up to those expectations," he said. "We had a lot of players that missed training camp. And for a football team that is not a great football team—and I know we would all like to perceive ourselves as a great football team—especially those of us who have a direct hand in it—that's not the case at this time. And so we had a lot of players that didn't show up for training camp, and that was certainly a negative for us.

"The year before, we had four Pro Bowl players. We had four players that had the type of year that you'd like to have players have—a lot of players have . . . four of them voted into the Pro Bowl the year before. Last year—this past season—we only had one. One of our Pro Bowl players got hurt, held out in training camp and wasn't very effective. We had one player, of course, that returned. We had another player that is no longer with the football team that was a Pro Bowl player the year before. We had another player who was in the Pro Bowl the year before but he was not on our practice field a whole lot during the course of last season and therefore his effectiveness dropped off a little bit and he didn't have quite the year he had the year before. So four of what we call impact or dominant-type players were not playing to that type of a level for one reason or another. I am not pointing a finger at those guys—I'm leading to something. Some of those things were not anything they had any control over. So some of our dominant players were not there, or weren't able to do the same type of things that they had done the year before.

"And herein lies, I think, one of the biggest problems—if there is such a thing—that we have as an organization football-wise, on the field. After the season was over, I did a little study, a little research. I'm kind of a numbers guy and I like to play around with looking at different things. And I looked back and I asked myself, I said, 'Okay, during this last season we had a lot of average performances by a lot of football players.' We didn't have anybody that really jumped out there and had that "Player of the Year" type year, that Pro Bowl type year. Sterling Sharpe certainly did, but I'm saying there weren't the people that you look at our team and say, 'Now these guys are dominant in the National Football League.'

"So I went back and did a little research, and I've said this other places I've been, so this is not something that's going to be revolutionary. But I went back and I started checking: How do you build your dominant players? Where do you get your impact players? Where do you get your Jerry Rices and your (Joe) Montanas and all these guys that take teams to Super Bowls?

"You generally get them through the draft. Occasionally there's a trade that comes about that produces somebody but generally they come from the draft. And I went back and I started looking. Where do you usually pick up those dominant players? They're usually in the first or second round, sometimes in the third. But I just went back and checked the first two rounds of the draft from 1980 to 1991. And it was amazing to me how few of those players are still on this football team, until you get to 1987, 1986.

"I'll just give you some numbers here. For example, in 1980, of our first two draft choices, only one of them is here . . . Mark Lee. In 1981, neither one of them are here. In 1982, we've got one . . . Ron Hallstrom; 1983, neither one of them are here; 1984, neither one of them are here; 1985, Ken Ruettgers; 1986, neither one of the top two draft choices are here.

"And this is not because of poor drafting. If you go back and research—and I'm not going to bore you with all those gory details—but you go back and look at why those guys aren't here, there were a couple of bad drafts in there, which every football team is going to have...But we had two guys whose careers were ended because of injury and sickness. We had some guys that had some off the field problems—that the club had to either trade or let go, or whatever—but they're not here. And so you have to get to 1987—one of those picks is still here . . . Johnny Holland.

"Then, from 1988 to the present, our top picks are here, the guys are on our football team. And this is one of the things that had to happen for us to be a good football team in 1991, and for years to come—we have to replenish those guys that we would call impact, dominant or Pro Bowl-type players. That's where we are suffering the most right now. We've got a lot of guys that play hard; we've got a lot of guys that are good, solid players. Now we need the impact guys to supplement them."

Visualizing a brighter future, Infante proceeded to make a positive point. "This football team, in my opinion, has the potential for those players to be replenished," he said, "if you go back and start looking at the players we have drafted—the year before I got here, actually, and start looking at those players. These players have been told by me, in both of our mini-camps, that one of the reasons—one of the ways that we have to get better—is somebody, not just one or two, but a good number, a good handful of these players that are going into their second, third, fourth year in the National Football League—that have potential to be impact players—need to make the next step. In my opinion, there are about 12 players on this football team that could be—and there's a lot of 'ifs' and wishes and hopes in football—but there's about 12 players that are going into what should be the prime time of their careers—that have to make the next step.

"Not all 12 of those guys are going to go to the Pro Bowl,not all 12 of those guys are going to be impact players, not all of those 12 guys are even going to be starters on this football team," Infante acknowledged. "But for our football team to make the next step, to get into that level of competition that we can compete for playoff contention every year, we need for at least half of those players to make that kind of a statement. We need at least half of those players, in the next year—hopefully this coming season—to say, 'Okay, I'm going to take this God-given ability that I've got; I'm on the verge of either being a starter, an impact player or a guy that's going to go out there'—and the way I like to talk about—is 'rise above coaching'. You have to have players that rise above coaching. You can't get on a blackboard and draw lines on the board, whether you're on either side of the ball, and expect that you're going to out-coach a team because your lines are going to be longer or shorter or more well thought-out than somebody else's lines. You have players that can rise above—rise above—what's drawn on the blackboard, go beyond that. Because otherwise you'll have just a bunch of robots out there."

Infante has said the Packers' defense needs to get pass rush help from the linebackers and has listed second year pro Tony Bennett, here zeroing in on the Cardinals' Timm Rosenbach, as a leading candidate.

Infante claims the attention of Pro Bowl receiver Sterling Sharpe during a mini-camp session.

Elaborating on this point in an in-depth interview, Infante asserted, "If they haven't reached starting status or star status, some of those players need to step forward and reach that level for us to be a better football team.

"I think we have an awful lot of candidates that any one of them could step out there and do that. Certainly not all of them will, but we've got to hope that a good number of them will make the next step in their development.

"And what we need is from those 12 guys I referred to—we need to have six or seven of those guys jump out there in this year and then next year, they're going into their fourth year, going into their third year, going into their second year—to make an impact on this football team. If that'll happen, we can be a good, solid football team.

"And then we'll have to see how many close games we win, because that's the bottom line. You win close games, you go to the playoffs; you don't win close games, you're at home.

"Last year, if my math is correct, the San Francisco 49ers won nine ball games by seven or less points. I think they won about six or seven of 'em by three or less points. So it doesn't mean that they're such a dominant football team, but they're just winning those close games because they've got the players that can make the plays when it's crunch time. We don't have a lot of that going on here right now. But I think that the potential is there to have that happen."

There are those who will contend that this "big play" capacity must begin at the quarterback position, an unsettled one on the Packer scene in 1990, in part because of a protracted holdout, in part because of injuries.

Appraising the current personnel, Infante said, "Assuming that we'll get everybody signed, I think our quarterback situation can be as solid, if not more so, than it has been since I've been here.

"I think the addition of Mike Tomczak will make it very competitive. And, of course, Anthony (Dilweg) now is going into his third year. Blair Kiel came on last year and proved that he can play in this league.

"And, of course, Don (Majkowski) has done that in the past, so I think it's going to be an interesting battle from those guys as to who's going to end up being our quarterbacks. But I think it's going to be a solid group of quarterbacks, assuming everybody stays healthy and everybody is signed going into camp."

Responding to a question concerning his comfort level with the addition of Tomczak, Infante replied, "It makes me comfortable now knowing now that at least Anthony has played an appreciable amount of the season, Blair Kiel has played in various games last season—there's some experience that's been gained there.

"And then, again, with the hope that Don returns to his top form and you can throw into that equation the addition of Tomczak, which gives you a guy that's got a track record and has a lot of experience as a starter in this league and has proved that he can take a team and win with it."

The subject turned to a related matter—the offensive line—and the difficulties it encountered last year. Could it have been merely an aberration?

"Well, I think there were a lot of factors that came into play there," Infante said. "Starting out the season, we had basically a whole different group than we had the year before, with the exception of Ken Ruettgers, and Ruettgers then had knee surgery and was missed for a period of time. And then, when he came back, we had to work him back into the flow of things.

"Tony Mandarich was only starting his first year, not having played much as a rookie. Then the holdouts, particularly the guard situation, and we had a chance at center from the year before.

"So all the players should be signed and ready to go by the time we get to camp this time. I think that in itself will make the offensive line a considerably more cohesive and workable unit and it should be much more productive."

Addressing another question, whether improvement in the offensive line is the key to upgrading the running game, off key in 1990, the Packers' field leader rejoined, "I think there's a lot more to it than that. I think that the running game will be upgraded. Hopefully one of the main reasons will be the fact that our offensive line will play better.

"Secondly, we're going to have to find a running back that goes out and really makes a statement that he's the guy we should be giving the ball to, to make positive yards.

"And then, thirdly, I hope that we can play in closer games and have ourselves ahead in more games to where we can spend more attention on the running game. The running game gets neglected when the scores are lopsided in favor of the other team."

Dose he feel confident Darrell Thompson, as a second year professional, could be that productive fullback?

"I think Darrell certainly could be. We'll just have to wait and see how quickly he develops and proves that is a true statement—that he can be the guy. But I think Darrell certainly could be the running back that could make it happen.

"I really think we have a lot of candidates to be the guy—and we're not locked into any one particular player. I think that the running backs we had here last year, plus the addition of a Webb (Chuck, a third round selection in this year's draft) and Walter Dean (a sixth round choice) and Derrick

Douglas (a Plan B acquisition) and all the players we've added like Allen Rice.

"We've added a lot of players in the backfield and that should make it very competitive back there. And we'll try our best to let those guys settle that issue for themselves as to who the best backs are.

"But there's more to playing running back than just running the football, too. You have to be able to block for pass protection purposes and lead block if the other back's carrying the ball, and do a good job faking and knowing assignments and things of this nature . . . and also be able to catch the ball to some degree. So we'll just have to get into training camp and find out which of those guys fits the mold the best."

On the other side of the football, Infante has listed improvement in the pass rush as a top priority on defense.

Asked if he sees this happening, he replied, "Well, we certainly spent some time drafting a couple of defensive linemen, particularly, early in the draft (Oregon State nose tackle Esera Tuaolo, in the second round, and defensive end Don Davey of Wisconsin, in the third). We hope they can certainly add some impact to our pass rush.

"We also need to have somebody like Tony Bennett come on and have a real strong year. Hopefully, Tim Harris practices and keeps himself going on the practice field to keep his production level up.

"Certainly we should be able to get some pass rush out of some of our linebackers.Scotty Stephen should do a solid job in that regard, so it's not necessarily going to be just the defensive line. We need to get some help out of our linebackers in the pass rush department also."

Could Matt Brock, coming off a promising second season, be the pass rusher needed?

"Matt Brock certainly could be. He's getting bigger all the time. If Matt comes back in real good shape, he could be. Shawn Patterson's got the quickness and the athletic ability to be a good pass rusher. And we've got to hope that Shawn stays healthy and that he can make the next step in his development. He's in that group of young players that I think are now at a kind of crossroads. They need to decide whether they want to go ahead and just be players that are out there playing, or if they want to go and make a name for themselves and go on and be impact-type players."

A parallel, if not even more pertinent concern, Infante said, is the matter of attitude, which could in the final analysis be even more important to their future success than athletic ability.

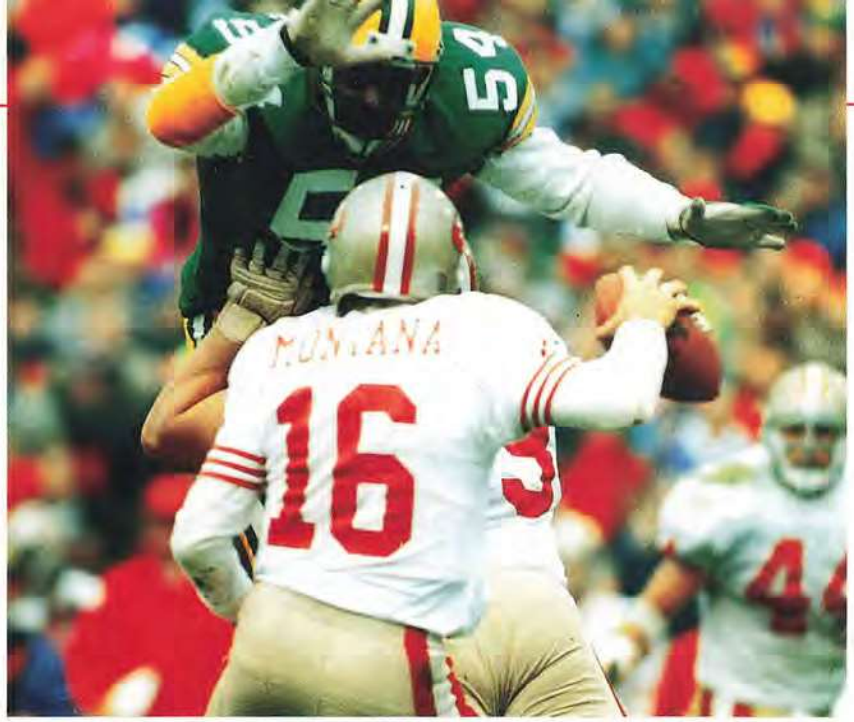
Hopeful that such problems are behind him and his team, he said, "One of the things that happened to us last year is that we had some people that took a selfish approach to this game of football. They call this a team sport; this is not boxing, this is not tennis, this is football.It takes 50 guys, working together, for you to be successful in this business. Last year, we had some players—and believe me when I say this, I want to make this perfectly clear—75 per cent of our football team worked very, very hard, gave us everything that they had.

"But we had a few guys that took a 'me' approach, instead of a 'we' approach. Instead of an 'us' approach, it was 'I' and it was 'me.' We had a few guys that couldn't accept the role that they were asked to fill. And when you have 47 guys on a roster, everybody can't touch the ball, everybody can't sack the quarterback, and everybody can't have his play called every time.

"And believe me, this is not something that I haven't already talked to the players about—this football team has to take on that 'we' approach again. Two years ago, the team had a 'we' approach; last year, 75 to 80 per cent of our team had a 'we' approach, and there were a few of them that had an 'I' and a 'me" approach, and it was a cancer. And it got to a point that we had just enough guys, just enough guys, hanging on to the rope instead of pulling on it, that we had to drag farther just to keep them up with us. That can't happen to us next year if we expect to be a good football team. I don't expect it to happen."

Proceeding to document his confidence,

Tackle Tony Mandarich, shielding Don Majkowski from the Vikings' Al Noga, now has a year's experience as a starter and is expected to be a major factor in upgrading the Packer attack in '91.



Scott Stephen became a starter at outside linebacker in 1990 replacing the retired John Anderson and Infante is counting on the fifth year pro to play a key role in the Packers pass rush.

Infante labeled this year's first two mini-camps "as good a mini-camps as we have had since I've been here. I'm talking about the attitude of the football team...In my opinion, the attitude of this football team is very good. We had 22 unsigned veterans (at the time of the mini-camps) and 19 of those guys showed up, and most all of them, in the second camp in particular, participated in just about everything we did. That's encouraging. That did not happen last year. We had a lot of our unsigned veterans that came out there with their sunglasses on and stood around and watched and didn't participate. This year, they were here, they were in meetings, they were participating . . . a few of them didn't, but very few. We had 14 draft choices show up in the first mini-camp and everyone of them participated in everything we did. Not a one of them held out because his agent said, 'Don't go out on the practice field for fear of getting hurt.' Not a one of them did that—except the guys, of course, that were already injured when we drafted them.

"So what I'm trying to say is I think that the attitude of the team is pretty good. I'm hoping that that 'me' will turn to 'we' in '91 and that we'll have a lot more productive football season strictly because our attitude will be better.

"I hope this football team has learned—I've said it over and over again: I think what you do when you have a situation like last year is you learn from it. We can't change it—it's history, it's now behind us.

"But I've said this over and over again: I hope it's a stepping-stone, not a stumbling block. I hope what it does is tell our guys what you have to do to be effective in a team sport. And especially this football team.

"Until this football team becomes loaded with Pro Bowl players, and dominant players, we have to play at our peak level each and every Sunday, or Thursday night, or whatever day it is that we're playing, for us to be an effective football team."

"I sense that we've learned from last football season; I would certainly hope that we have—I would be disappointed if we haven't. And that we understand a little more about ourselves and what kind of football team we really are . . . and that we are not the type that can go out there and beat anybody on a given Sunday without a great effort. And I sense at this point that I think our team has learned that lesson the hard way.

"I think that we have learned that the holdouts are not the answer . . . and then the other uncertainty—we can control the holdouts and we can control our attitude; we may not be able to control our injuries.

"So if we can keep those first two things going pretty strong, and stay pretty free of injuries, this could be a solid football team.

Looking to the NFC Central race, the results of which will be critical to the Green and Gold's '91 season, Infante observed, "Two years ago, we went 5-and-3 in our division. Last year we went 3-and-5. I think you've got to go 5-and-3 in your division to win it. If you go any less than 5-and-3 in your division, I think you're kidding yourself. So we've got to win at least one more than we lose—I guess you have to say two more—you have to get beyond that 50 per cent ratio as far as wins to give yourself a chance.

"We could have another fine year, hopefully, if everybody's in camp, everybody's healthy, everybody's got a good attitude, and some of those guys jump out there and make an impact we're looking for.

"Who knows? We could jump out there . . ." ©

Is It MAJIK?

Tom Mulhern
Green Bay Press-Gazette

"This has definitely been the ultimate accomplishment in my career. To be considered an all-pro, you can't get any better."

"When I woke up in surgery and they told me there was a tear, I started to cry. I was a little scared."

The game giveth, and it taketh away.

Nobody understands that better these days than Green Bay Packers quarterback Don Majkowski.

It can be a fragile balance.

In December of 1989, Majkowski was on top of his profession. A 10th round draft pick in just his third year and first as a full-time starter Majkowski not only was named into the Pro Bowl, he was the runner-up in the league's most valuable player voting to San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana.

"It's kind of a rags-to riches story," Majkowski admitted at the time.

Little did he know the next 12 months would bring a reverse riches-to-rags journey that would be no less astonishing.

For his final act, "Majik" almost vanished before everyone's eyes.

Majkowski's troubles began last July, shortly after the start of training camp. His father, Fred, a Buffalo fireman, suffered a stroke. Majkowski and his father are very close. At the time, Majkowski was in the early stages of a holdout that would eventually reach 45 days. Then came a shoulder injury that was found to be a slight rotator cuff tear in his throwing shoulder and possibly threatened his career.

The most difficult year in Majkowski's life?

"The hardest year of my life, without question, was the year I spent at military academy (between high school and college)," Majkowski, 27, said.

"But it was the hardest emotional year."

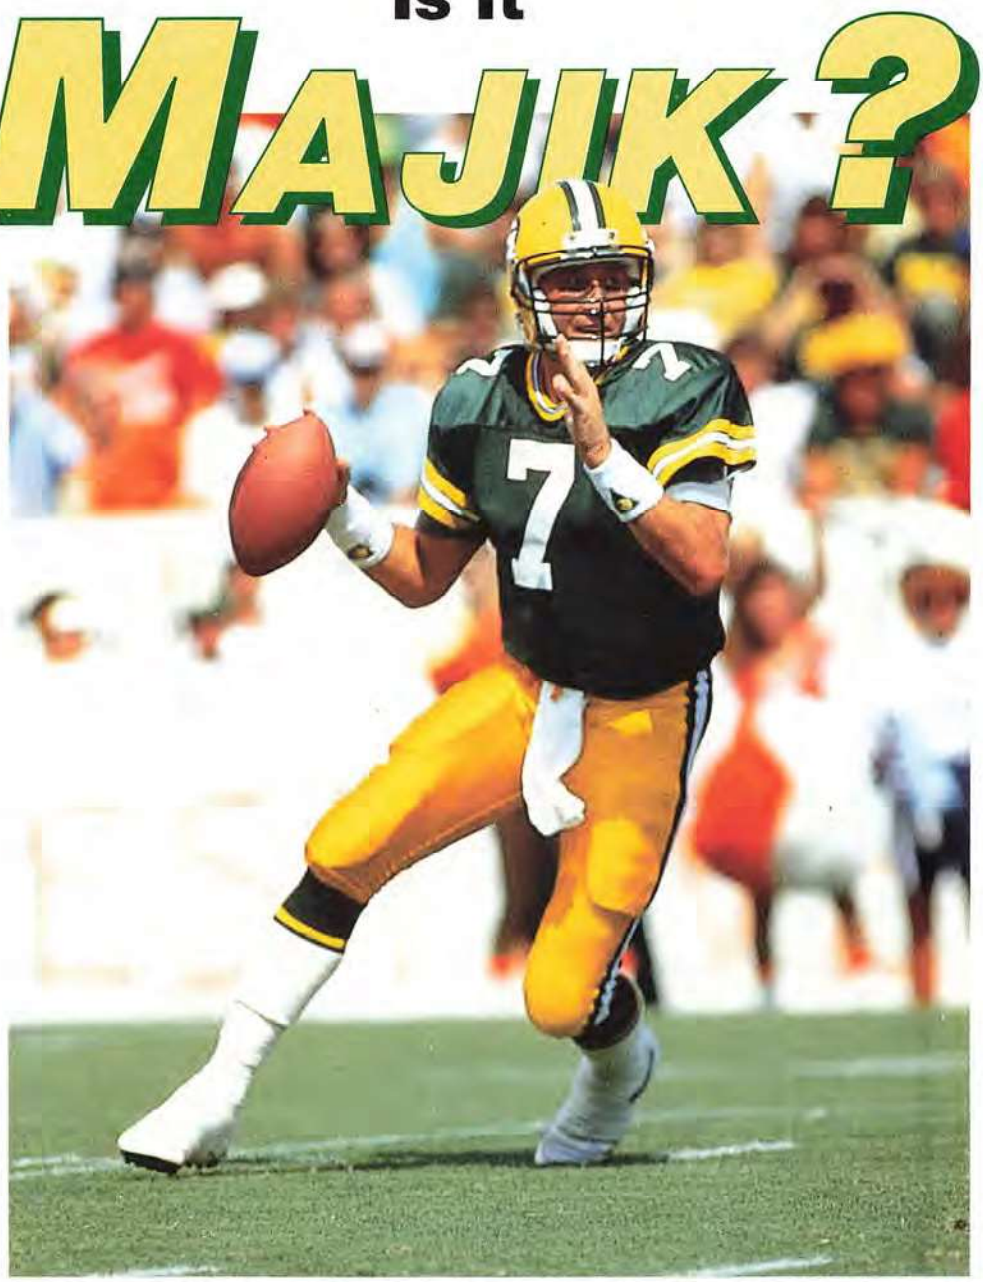
Majkowski was watching one of President Bush's addresses to the nation during the Persian Gulf War when he heard something that struck a chord. Bush used the Thomas Paine quote, "These are the times that try men's souls."

Because of his own situation, and perhaps the world situation as well at the time, the words gave Majkowski solace and a little perspective.

"I kind of related that to my situation the past year," Majkowski said.

"I'm willing to accept what happened and make myself a better person from it. Just go on."

It's certainly not the first time Majkowski has faced adversity. As a high school senior, he suffered a broken arm that left him without a single college scholarship offer. That let to his year at Fort Union (VA) Military Academy, where he followed another quarterback named Vinny Testaverde.



Vintage Majik: Characteristically on the move, and poised to unload, Don Majkowski simultaneously sights in on his target upfield.

After moving on to the University of Virginia, Majkowski endured another injury that disrupted his senior year, a severe bruise on his passing shoulder during the fourth game and caused him to be virtually unknown entering the draft.

"I don't want to say I've matured from it (the past year), but I did in a sense," Majkowski said. "It made me more aware of how fast your career can be over in this league.

"I was on top of the world in '89 and 1990 could have been the last year in my career. You've got to really learn while you're playing this game, you have to take the most advantage of this opportunity. Work your tail off and really give it all you can. I've always done that, but I'm really more aware of that. I really want to capitalize on this time of my life when I'm able to do this."

Majkowski couldn't do anything but sit prior to the start of last season due to his contract holdout. By the time he finally signed a one-year deal worth a reported $1.5 million on the Wednesday before the opening game, Majkowski had lost his starting job to second-year backup Anthony Dilweg.

"It hurt a great deal," Majkowski said of his holdout. "There's no question. But that's a situation I couldn't avoid. I had to take care of financial things. It was unfortunate it happened that way, but if I had to do it again, I'd do it all the same way."

Majkowski regained his starting job in the third week, but didn't regain his form until the ninth week, when he led the Packers to a 29-16 demolition of the playoff-bound Los Angeles Raiders.

"It took six weeks, like (the length of time) I would have been in training camp," Majkowski said. "Once I went through those six weeks, I started playing the kind of football I'm capable of playing when I'm on top of my game."

Going into Phoenix the next week, the Packers were only 4-5, but seemed to be getting ready for a playoff push.

"No doubt," Majkowski said. "We were on a roll. We had a lot of confidence. We finally felt we were back in the groove we were in the last year ('89). Then I got hurt."

It was the middle of the second quarter, the Packers led 7-0 and were driving toward another score. Majkowski rolled to his right, looking for a receiver.

In the previous three games, Majkowski had been sacked 18 times. But he always bounced back. Until this time.

Initially, the injury was described as a "strained" rotator cuff.

Majkowski was expected to miss the next game, but no more.

But the injury didn't improve. The pain wouldn't go away. Majkowski, who had suffered from tendinitis in the same shoulder which needed rehabilitation the previous two off-seasons privately knew this was different. He tried to throw but couldn't.

Dr. E. S. Brusky of the Packers medical staff was quoted as saying Majkowski was healthy enough to return.

Questions were raised. People speculated that Majkowski was protecting himself for future contract negotiations.

"The most frustrating thing for me was the period after I got hurt, " Majkowski said. "We didn't know the severity of the injury. I worked as hard as I could. I worked so hard to try and get back during the season. The frustrating thing was when I started getting criticism from the fans and the media and people from the organization. 'If I came back and didn't play well, it was going to hurt my negotiations for the following year.'

"Hearing people talk like that really hurt me. I was in here four or five hours a day, trying to get back, to help the team get in the playoffs.

They're Teammates Now: Don Majkowski and erstwhile Bear quarterback Mike Tomczak, who are on the same side these days, were opponents when the camera caught them changing notes prior to the Packers' 140th meeting with the Bears in Lambeau Field September 16.

"Going through therapy, such severe pain, still trying to go out on the field and throw, each week trying to play. It was impossible. I still tried to do it. I hope people understand now that I really did give it all my effort to try and come back. I never, ever baby an injury. I'll play with anything, any kind of pain, if I can. That was the part that probably frustrated me the most. It hurt me more than anything."

Majkowski ultimately got a second opinion from a doctor in San Diego. During arthroscopic surgery to relieve an impingement in the shoulder, a small tear was found in the rotator cuff.

The news was a at once both a relief and a frightful jolt. Here was a reason for the immense pain, but the injury was regarded as potentially career-threatening.

If you want to get Majkowski's competitive juices flowing, tell him he can't do something.

Majkowski wasn't supposed to be ready to throw until the start of training camp. But by the first minicamp in May, he was throwing to the tight ends during team workouts. By that time, Majkowski declared himself 90 percent fit and expressed confidence that he would be 100 percent by the start of training camp.

Even more encouraging, Majkowski said his dad is doing very well. "He's pretty much gained all his motion back," Majkowski said. "He's doing fine."

Although he relishes the chance to prove wrong the people who said he was finished, Majkowski said all the motivation he needs comes from within.

"Writers can write things about me," Majkowski said. "That may be a little motivation, but most of it comes from inside. I want to prove to myself that I'll come back. I'm just so relieved that finally I had this thing taken care of.

"My daily routine is so pain free. Just little things. Even drinking a glass of milk or whatever. I used to have a lot of pain. Now, it's just so nice to wake up in the morning and not have any pain. I can sleep a lot better. The last two years I was in a lot of pain."

Majkowski's confidence certainly hasn't been affected.

"I never really think about getting injured when I'm playing," he said. " I just take things the way they come. Maybe for one or two days (after the surgery) I was down and I was really scared. But that was about it. I have a pretty strong inner self.

"I was just so determined to come back. In my career, I've always had to come back and prove myself again. A lot of people were writing I would never throw again. I'll never be able to play again. I just never believed it. I knew how hard I worked in the off-season.

"It's been an incredible road to where I am now, to recuperate so fast. People will never realize what I went through and what kind of dedication I had this off-season to get where I am. I worked my tail off, five days a week, for 4 1/2 months. It paid off."

Even though he had another contract to negotiate prior to this season and there will be lingering doubts about his shoulder until he tests it in game situations, in at least one way things are more settled for Majkowski coming into this season. Last year, despite his success in '89, there were still some people who labeled him merely a product of Coach Lindy Infante's offensive system. But as the Packers showed after Majkowski's injuries, all the parts may not be interchangeable.

"I don't like to say the system made me or I made the system," Majkowski said. "I like to think it's a combination of both, because it is. I make a lot of things happen outside the system and the system is a very good system to play under."

Majkowski has been on top, and he's been on the bottom. He has no doubt which direction he is headed now.

"I know I'll get better with experience," he said. "Hopefully, the team will improve. We'll all get better, stay injury free.

"We have a lot of great things left to come."

THE TOMCZAK FACTOR

Mike Confident He's Qualified

This is a story that had the makings of a fairy tale.

The hometown kid goes off to play college football. Overcomes a possible career-threatening injury. Overlooked in the National Football League draft. Signs with the professional football team up the street. Becomes the starting quarterback. Leads the team into the playoffs . . . Then gets booed by the hometown fans, leaves the team and signs with its most bitter rival. OK, so the ending needs a little work. Real life in the form of the NFL has a way of intruding on fairy tales.

Better yet, maybe this should be a TV movie of the week, starring new Green Bay Packers quarterback Mike Tomczak.

Actually, Tomczak isn't in search of a new ending as much as a new beginning, which helps explain why after six years with the Chicago Bears, he finds himself in Green Bay.

"There are probably people that still think I wear a Bears T-shirt underneath my flannel shirt," Tomczak said. "But that's pretty much all been put to rest. I'm ready to wear the Green and Gold and show the people I'm very supportive of the Packers tradition. The neat thing is you're going from one rich tradition to another rich tradition."

Mike Tomczak, the former Bear quarterback who joined the Packers as a Plan B free agent April 1, gets set to display his arm strength during a minicamp practice.

Tomczak was among an NFL-high 13 Plan B signings by the Packers, who were looking for a little insurance at quarterback. Don Majkowski is coming off rotator cuff surgery and had a new contract to negotiate entering this season.

Before signing, Tomczak was told by Coach Lindy Infante that Majkowski was the starter, if all goes well.

"He (Infante) told me that, barring injury, Don will be the starter," Tomczak said. "If it breaks down, he wants to go with a seasoned veteran."

One of the reasons the Packers were attractive to Tomczak was Infante and his reputation for getting the most out of quarterbacks. Tomczak and Majkowski got to be good friends at various off-season functions in recent years and the two discussed the situation in Green Bay prior to Tomczak's signing.

"Probably the main thing I've seen (in Infante) is a lot of integrity," Tomczak said. "The will to win. He's very inspirational. It's the old cliche, you tell a guy he's a stud enough times, he's going to start believing it.

"There was an instance in minicamp where I overthrew a guy and the ball was picked off. I was expecting a thrashing or something. He said, 'Hey, this isn't September. Relax and go out there next time and you'll do a better job."

That style contrasts somewhat with Tomczak's former coach, Mike Ditka of the Bears.

Tomczak and Ditka had what was at times a stormy relationship, with a few memorable sideline confrontations, although Tomczak has gone to great pains since leaving not to say anything bad about Ditka.

"I don't know if it was a matter of not seeing eye-to-eye," Tomczak said.

"There were some communication differences. If that dictates not seeing eye-to-eye, it was because of communication, or lack of it.

"He just wanted perfection out of the quarterback position. Every head coach wants that."

Part of the problem might have been that Tomczak had to follow Jim McMahon, the controversial former Bears quarterback who clashed long and loud with Ditka.

"A lot of it had to do, I'm sure, with the spinoff from Jim McMahon," Tomczak said. "It was the norm for Mike Ditka and the quarterbacks not to be in agreement all the time. When we won games, he was in your corner.

"As long as you go out there and play the best you can play that given game he's going to support you regardless, even if you lose."

Still, there were times, Tomczak admitted, "I just wanted to hang it up and say this game is no longer any fun for me."

Looking back now, some of the most fun Tomczak ever had was at Thornton Fractional North High School in Calumet City, IL, a suburb of Chicago. Tomczak's father, Ron, was his high school football coach.

"At that point in time, I guess I didn't really realize and appreciate it as I do today," Tomczak said. "I was a high school kid, just caught up in that niche of high school things. It's probably the best experience I've ever had in all my playing days.

"I've had some good games professionally, but when you look back on it (playing for his dad), the older you get, the better it was."

Ron Tomczak is now an assistant football coach at the College of St. Francis in Joliet, IL.

"He's pretty much my focal point," Tomczak said. "He's my role model. That pretty much sums it up."

Tomczak's mother died when he was very young and his father remarried. There are six kids, three boys and three girls in the family.

"My step mom is fantastic," Tomczak said. "The three children she had are super. It's something every family wishes it had, healthy children and good camaraderie."

Tomczak went to Ohio State, where he started for three years. The Buckeyes went 9-3 each season. Tomczak broke his leg during spring practice prior to his senior year, but still returned in the third week the next season to lead his team to the Big Ten title and a berth in the 1985 Rose Bowl. (Southern Cal won 20-17.)

"If your priorities aren't set to begin with, it pretty much fine tunes them," Tomczak said of the injury. "I realized at any given point, any given play can end your career. It was one incident that opened my eyes. The most adversity I ever had to come back from.

"It not only nurtured me, but matured me a great deal. I really found out how tough I was."

He would need it later.

Even though the Buckeyes were winning, some alumni were already starting to get restless with Coach Earle Bruce.

"They'd give anything for a 9-3 season right now at Ohio State," Tomczak said.

Tomczak didn't know it at the time, but that was also good preparation for what was ahead.

Tomczak made his first start for the Bears in the fifth game of his second year, against Philadelphia.

"You kind of pinch yourself," he said. "Here I was, sitting in the stands in the '70s; the middle part of the '80s, I'm out there wearing a uniform and calling signals. It hit home as quickly as possible, especially when (Walter) Payton was in the huddle and he hits you and says, 'Let's go play.' "

Playing in front of the hometown fans would turn out to be more of a curse than a blessing, although Tomczak still believes it was a worthwhile experience.

"Initially, maybe I overplayed it too much," he said of any extra pressures a hometown product faces. "Now, looking back, it ran its course the first two years. After that, it was all work. I'm just glad I had the experience. I wouldn't trade it for anything."

Tomczak's record as a starter is 21-10, one of the best in the NFL. He was also the starting quarterback in the Bears' only two playoff victories since the 1985 Super Bowl team.

But he became a target of the fans when the Bears couldn't duplicate the success of their Super Bowl season. The home fans booed Tomczak ruthlessly at times last year, when he lost the starting job to Jim Harbaugh, a first-round pick in '87. The Bears then left Tomczak unprotected after the season, protecting only two quarterbacks, Harbaugh and Peter Tom Willis, a third-round pick in 1990.

"I think I was indirectly affected through my family," Tomczak said of the booing. "Knowing they were at the games and had to put up with that. I wouldn't wish that upon anyone.

"But it was such a minute thing at that point of the season. The media wanted to magnify it and play it up. If I reflect on that after everything that's happened in my six years, I wouldn't be a qualified professional."

One thing Tomczak believes he has become is a qualified professional. Not many free agent quarterbacks progress even as far as he has. Tomczak may not be considered a franchise-type quarterback, but given an adequate supporting cast, he has shown he can win.

"When you look at the statistics and everything, they don't pan out to be a Pro Bowl quarterback," Tomczak said."But when you look at the main statistic, winning percentage, they're good numbers.

"I questioned myself at times. I think every professional athlete questions himself as far as your talent goes. I look forward to a very optimistic training camp. Hopefully, I'll progress to that next level. Right now, I'm getting educated all over again. I'm really testing my talents again."

ANTHONY

It's Showtime

Anthony Dilweg asked for it. Oh, how he asked for it.

During his rookie season with the Green Bay Packers in 1989, Dilweg, a drama major in college, dutifully played the role of understudy to quarterback Don Majkowski.

The show was a hit and Majkowski was the star.

Meanwhile, Dilweg's big break never came. He was on the active roster for all 16 games, but spent all but two plays against Detroit during the 10th game away from center stage and the bright lights.

If only he could get a chance, Dilweg thought.

"We were winning," Dilweg said of the '89 season. "That's what's important. It was tough for me. I was a part of it but not a part of it. The only player that doesn't even get on the special teams. You want to be a part of it."

The chance finally came last year. Then the show flopped. Guess who got blamed?

There were some fleeting moments, Dilweg candidly admitted, when the serenity of the sidelines didn't seem like such a bad alternative.

"To be honest with you, you do think that way," Dilweg said "It's only human nature."

But those moments quickly passed. More than anything else, Dilweg wanted to show what he can do. That's still the way he feels.

"I guess that's just the kind of person I am, " Dilweg said. "I'm real encouraged about some things. I'm excited about some things. This offseason has given me a chance to reflect. I think the people that succeed in this world are the ones that learn from their mistakes.

"It sounds kind of cliche-ish, but what else is there to say. You've got to have a good attitude."

Much to his credit, one thing Dilweg managed to keep through all the ups and downs of last season was a good attitude."

It wasn't easy.

Dilweg spent the entire season trying to control things beyond his control. First it was Majkowski's 45-day holdout, which ended only four days before the first game.

By then, Dilweg had been named the starter for the opening game, but Majkowski's signing upstaged him.

Coach Lindy Infante insisted he would not have a quick hook, but it was hard for Dilweg not to look over his shoulder at the Pro Bowler waiting in the wings.

"I knew it was inevitable Don was going to play," Dilweg said. "It's sad, because you know it's going to happen. I was hoping it would last two or three or four or five games. It would have been nice to be a part of that."

Dilweg prospered in the opener, getting named NFC Offensive Player of the Week for his part in the 36-24 win over the Los Angeles Rams. It was and impressive beginning. Dilweg completed 20 of 32 passes for 248 yards and three touchdowns.

But when he struggled the second week against Chicago, he was back on the sidelines by the third week.

"It doesn't give you a whole lot of opportunities to mess up a whole bunch," Dilweg said. "I would have loved to come back the (third) week

Dilweg's Debut: Anthony Dilweg, calling the plays behind center James Campen, was making his first regular season start as a professional. He made it one to remember completing 20 of 32 passes for 248 yards and 3 touchdowns—without an interception—and earned NFC "Offensive Player of the Week" honors in leading the Packers to a 32-24 victory over the Rams.

because I need that time."

Dilweg's next chance came when Majkowski was injured in the ninth game against Phoenix. Although he hadn't thrown a pass for seven weeks and had played only briefly in one game since the second week, Dilweg rallied the Packers to victory with two fourth-quarter touchdown passed, then played a solid game in a win the next week over Tampa Bay.

At the time, Majkowski's injury was not believed to be serious, so Dilweg's status was week-to-week, much like the start of the year.

"There was so much uncertainty," Dilweg said. "I didn't know if Don was going to come back from the injury. Then they cleared him and said he could play, but Don said he couldn't. I tried real hard to keep my mind out of it. But you can't help but look to the side, watch him (Majkowski) throw and think, 'Is he going to be back this week?"

Those questions were finally put to rest when Majkowski's injury was diagnosed as a slight rotator cuff tear and he was finished for the year.

By then, however, more questions had been raised about Dilweg.

His undoing came in the 12th week against Minnesota, when he was sacked five times and intercepted three times in a humbling 23-7 loss.

Dilweg now knows what kind of quarterback he is, because he found out the next week against Seattle what kind of quarterback he isn't. With the beating from the Vikings still ringing in his ears, Dilweg chucked his usual approach and tried to become a scrambler, ala Majkowski. The result was a shaky 6-for-22, 69-yard performance in a loss to the Seahawks.

"I remember consciously coming out of the (Minnesota) game thinking I've got to scramble," Dilweg said. "I've got to move around in the pocket. I actually created my own demise that game. I'm not Don Majkowski. I'm not going to scramble around like he does. I can't kid myself. I'm going to have to do it differently.

"I found the kind of player I am, what I can do. I think it's important to realize your identity out there."

By the final game against Denver, Dilweg had learned his lesson and believes his game was back in sync. But the image that lingers in some minds of Dilweg's season is the 2 1/2-game stretch, from Minnesota to when he injured an arch against Philadelphia, in which he failed to generate an offensive touchdown.

That's in part what prompted the Packers to seek quarterback help in the off-season in the form of Plan B free-agent Mike Tomczak.

"I've had more people say to me, 'What are they going to do now, trade you?" Dilweg said. "'Are you third string?' I think that's what most people think."

If anybody in the organization has lost faith, Dilweg said it's his job to earn it back.

"My way of changing that is just go out and do what I can do," he said.

What tended to get overlooked last year was that it was essentially Dilweg's rookie season in terms of playing time.

"Sure I get that year of experience and it's going to be a tremendous help to me, but I think you've got to take advantage of your situation," Dilweg said. "That was a situation that would have been nice to take advantage of."

Often times, however, it's the painful lessons in life that tend to stay with a person.

"We're talking negative reinforcement," Dilweg said. "It's true. It sits in your mind. You don't forget it. It's important that you don't dwell on it. You don't want it to bring you down or lose your self-confidence.

"You just say it happened and you look around and see who it happened to before and see how they reacted. The ones that get through it are the ones who look back and say, 'If I wouldn't have gone through that, I wouldn't have gotten better."

Dilweg went through it and now he believes he is better.

"I look at the last two years, sure I could chalk them up to experience," Dilweg said. "I think the experience stage is over. It's time to show if you're going to do something, do it now. If Don comes back and I don't play another down, all of a sudden I go into a fourth year and then you start getting categorized as a backup. I don't want that.

"This is a very important year for me. It's very important for me to show that I've made strides from last year to this year."

KIEL MAKES A CASE

With Cameo Comeback

Blair Kiel, who completed 23 of 31 passes for 198 yards, prepares to deliver a pass in the fourth quarter against the Seahawks' in December 9 game at County Stadium in Milwaukee.

Quite by chance, Blair Armstrong Kiel became one of the more intriguing "stories" of the Packers' 1990 season—and enhanced his stature in the team's quarterback picture in the process.

Kiel's artistic resurgence began abruptly on Sunday afternoon, December 9, when he was summoned from the bench by Head Coach Lindy Infante to replace starter Anthony Dilweg late in the third quarter of a game against Seattle in Milwaukee , with the Packers trailing 20-0.

The former Notre Dame field general, who had not thrown a pass in a regular season game in three years, proceeded to engineer a strong comeback, directing the offense to two fourth quarter touchdowns and narrowly missing a third that would have pulled out a victory when an 8-yard, fourth down pass to Jeff Query in the end zone was just wide of the mark with approximately a minute to play, permitting the Seahawks to escape with a 20-14 win.

In that commendable rescue effort, the 29-year-old Indianan posted the highest single game passing percentage of the season by a Packer quarterback, completing 23 of 31 attempts, a 74.2 mark. His 198-yard production included a 13-yard TD pass to wide receiver Perry Kemp and a one-yard scoring strike to tight end Ed West.

The Kiel "comeback" continued a week later when he again was pressed into service after starter Dilweg suffered a strained knee in the second quarter and was forced to leave the game against Philadelphia (Dec. 16). Although the Packers already were in a difficult position, trailing 17-0, Kiel completed 8 of 18 pass attempts for 67 yards against a bristling pass rush.

With Dilweg still sidelined, he made his first regular season start in three seasons as a Packer the following week, going the distance against the Detroit Lions in the Green and Gold's Lambeau Field regular season finale (Dec. 22). Turning in a sterling performance in a losing cause, he completed 20 of 36 passes for 239 yards, with one interception, on frigid afternoon which saw the wind chill plunge to 35 below zero.

Scoring the Packers' first touchdown of the afternoon on a 3-yard run in the first quarter, Kiel had the home forces out front at the third quarter's end, 17-10, but a 22-yard scoring return of an Ed West fumble by the Lions' Ray Crockett in the fourth quarter and a late TD drive by Detroit—spearheaded by the formidable Barry Sanders—enabled the visitors to pull out a 30-22 victory.

In looking to the new season, Infante paid tribute to the Columbus, Indiana native and his renaissance in the 1991 Packer Prospectus, asserting, "Blair Kiel came on last year and proved that he can play in this league." ⓒ

On his way: Sterling Sharpe, who has caught more passes in his first three seasons than any other receiver in Packer history (212), is en route to a 76-yard touchdown against the Bears in Chicago's Soldier Field—the longest of his career. He has eluded the Bear's Mark Carrier, sprawling on the ground, and leaves Mike Singletary (50) in his wake.

STERLING

STANDS ALONE

Pete Faust
The Milwaukee Journal

On and off the field, Green Bay Packers wide receiver Sterling Sharpe stands alone.

Based on his two consecutive selections to the Pro Bowl, some would consider him the best player on any of the state's major sports teams. Yet, little is really known about him. He seems to like it that way.

He is as complex and aloof as he is talented, a player who can be so many conflicting things. No player is so public, yet so private; so good, yet so unknown. He says he is "a loner who likes to make people happy," a contradiction that sums him up neatly.

On the practice field, no one talks as much or as loudly, He is more than practice-field chatter, though. He is also an accomplished public speaker who talks to kids about the perils of drug use. Despite all he has to say, no player on the Packers has been as reluctant to talk to reporters.

He also regularly declines fans' autograph requests after games or practices, but says he'll gladly respond to written requests for the same autograph, most likely with his own paper, envelope and stamp.

All these sometimes divergent elements are just part of a player unlike most in the National Football League. Believe Sharpe when he says, "I guess that is where I kind of break the mold."

How many other players actually like to practice, prefer the cold weather and will guarantee that they won't ever be a contract holdout again?

"I'm probably one of the only guys who truly has fun playing," Sharpe said.

Packers receivers coach Buddy Geis agrees.

"He plays football almost like a little kid," Geis said. "He goes out and has fun. That's why he gets better. I like to see him loose at our practice. It keeps everyone loose."

That can extend to games, too.

"If I'm having a good day, it seems like we're all having a good day," Sharpe said. "I don't think that's any one factor whether we win or lose, but everyone else seems to play a little more above what they're supposed to play if I'm having a good day."

And he has a lot of good days. After three years in the NFL, Sterling Sharpe has lived up to both of his names. He tied a 40-year league record set by Tom Fears of the Los Angeles Rams for most receptions in a player's first three seasons. Drafted in the first round in 1988, Sharpe has caught 212 passes in his career, an average of 71 per season.

He returned to the Pro Bowl after last season for the second consecutive year, despite playing the last six weeks with several cracked ribs, one of football's most painful injuries. He finished with 67 receptions for 1,105 yards and 6 touchdowns.

"Had he not been hurt, he could have had 75 to 80 catches," Geis said. "Anything over 70 is a great year. He is capable of catching 100."

Even thought his statistics dropped from his career-high 90 in 1989, Sharpe in many ways enhanced his reputation by remaining productive even though he had to endure a trying season, physically.

Late in training camp, Sharpe was also briefly hospitalized after losing feeling in his left side. The injury was believed to have been the result of a concussion.

It was a scary time, personally and professionally, for Sharpe. Even now, Sharpe is not convinced what caused the numbness. He does, though, expect it to happen again.

His cracked ribs forced him to miss practice yet he never missed a game, even though the Packers' medical staff recommended that he not play.

"If we had no shot of making the playoffs or if we were guaranteed a spot, I wouldn't have played," Sharpe said. "But almost every week, there was some scenario.

"I now know how to play hurt. That's about the only thing I got out of last season. I'm not saying people should get hurt, but everyone should go through that. You learn to appreciate being healthy."

Dr. E. S. Brusky, the Packers' team physician last year, said Sharpe is one of the toughest players he has ever seen.

"He played through a lot of pain," Brusky said. "He is a hell of a kid."

In what is perhaps a reflection of the respect Sharpe has earned around the league, opposing players did not try to exploit his injury. During pre-game conversations with players who would later be trying to stop him, Sharpe was surprised more than once by what he heard.

"A lot of defensive backs said, 'We're going to make the tackle, but we're not out to hurt you. We know your ribs are hurting," Sharpe said. "I played against some great defensive backs who believed in doing their job, nothing more."

To Sharpe, this is not really a job. "Only at contract time," he says.

Remember these words. He vows to be in training camp on time when the five-year contract he signed as a rookie is up in 1992.

But weren't you a holdout during training camp of your rookie season, Sterling?

"I was late as a rookie because I wanted to be late," Sharpe said. 'I was a little afraid of what was going on. I knew it would be difficult. I knew expectations would be high."

The high expectations took their toll. At South Carolina, he could always count on getting the ball thrown to him six to eight times a game. As a rookie, he was getting much fewer passes thrown his way.

Consequently, he became discouraged. Sharpe said many didn't understand his point of view.

"I started, but it wasn't like they were giving me a big opportunity," Sharpe said. "If you're going to run around on the field as an offensive starter for 3 1/2 quarters and not have the ball thrown your way, there is no way they can expect you to stay cheerful, excited and into a football game."

He credits Geis for much of his success. Both joined the Packers in 1988 in coach Lindy Infante's first year and a special relationship has developed. Player, coach and friends.

"Buddy has done a great job," Sharpe said. "He did a great job when I was a rookie, saying, 'You're the same guy you were last year at this time when everyone in college was terrified of you.'

"So much of this game is wins and losses, but it's my life. After the first year was over, I said, 'This is fun.' "

That is a far cry from his initial feelings.

"When I first came here, I said I'm coming here, make as much as I can and then leave," Sharpe said. "After listening to Lindy, I really feel in my heart, that we are a step away from being a championship team. I didn't believe that when I got here. I don't think he even did. We do now."

His enjoyment of the game extends beyond the normal parameters. Few players will admit to liking practice.

But Sharpe says beating a defensive teammate in practice can be more satisfying than beating an opponent in a game. To him, the challenge is greater because the Packers' defensive backs know Sharpe and the offense so well from days of practices, scrimmages and video watching.

"It sounds repetitious, but I have so much fun practicing and trying to come up with different things to do against defensive backs," Sharpe said. "They know how I think."

They might, but few others do. Sharpe keeps a distance from reporters and the public. He is the best and worst of interviews. Articulate, insightful and analytical, he has over

Collector's Cap: One of Sharpe's hobbies is collecting the autographs of his teammates—not on paper, however, but on the cap he invariably wears to practice, on the sideline during a game and while moving about in his daily life.

SHARPE INVADES NFL RECORD BOOK

The record book may not be the only measure of an athlete's worth, but it is likely to do until a better one comes along.

By this yardstick, Sterling Sharpe already has entrenched himself in both National Football League and Packer annals, no small achievement for one who came off the University of South Carolina campus just three years ago.

In that short span, he has tied a 40-year old NFL record for most passes caught in the first three seasons of a career, 212, a mark established by Tom Fears of the Los Angeles Rams in 1948-49-50.

Needless to say, his imposing total also represents an all-time Packer record. The old mark, 171, was set by James Lofton in 1978-79-80.

In the process, Sharpe also has reached 200 career receptions faster than any other receiver in Packer history, a plateau he attained when he made his 200th catch on December 2 last season at Minnesota—in only his 44th NFL game.

The erstwhile Gamecock also invaded the Packers' all-time receiving top ten, moving past Jim Taylor (18'/) into ninth place with those 212 career catches.

the years become increasingly less available.

The rare interviews are often on the run to his car. He can be as tough to cover for sportswriters as he is for defensive backs.

"It's not like I dislike the media," he said. "It's like signing autographs. You do it, but you don't really enjoy doing it. You don't like to, but you know it makes other people happy."

After the season, Sharpe tries to avoid dwelling on football.

"Then I can't wait to get back," Sharpe said.

When alone in the off-season, he can be found playing the piano in a house in South Carolina that he moved into earlier this year. He just recently started taking piano lessons. Other times, he is thinking of what to say to kids in a future speech.

"I like being alone," Sharpe said. "Give me a chance to hang with my friends or be alone and you'll usually find me alone. It gives me time to think. I've got speeches in my head until 1994."

JACKE FORGES UNIQUE NICHE IN PACKER RECORD BOOK

Chris Jacke delivers his record-breaking fifth field goal against the Raiders at the Memorial Coliseum in Los Angeles November 11. A 20-yarder, it followed successes of 39, 51, 32 and 24 yards to break a Packer single game record that was set by Paul Hornung in 1960. The holder is Don Bracken.

The Green Bay Packers have had some accomplished placekickers over their 72-year history, most notable among them Chester Marcol, Don Chandler, Paul Hornung and Jan Stenerud, who this year has been accorded the game's highest honor—enshrinement in the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

But it remained for youthful Chris Jacke, in only his second National Football League season, to break a record which had eluded all of his distinguished predecessors.

On November 11 last season, Jacke kicked five field goals in the course of a 29-16 Packer victory over the Raiders at the venerable Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum, thus eclipsing a mark which had stood since 1960 when Hornung set the old Packer record of four against the Steelers at Pittsburgh (October 30).

Oddly enough, Hornung's record had been equaled 15 times during the intervening 30 years—once by Hornung himself, no fewer than five times by Marcol and the 15th time by Jacke as a rookie in 1989, before the highly consistent UTEP alumnus ended the longtime "deadlock" last November.

Jacke, nominated as "The Placekicker of the '90s" by Pro Football Weekly following an outstanding rookie season in 1989, kicked field goals in all four quarters in setting the new standard against the Raiders. He connected from 39 yards in the first quarter, from 51 and 32 yards in the second quarter, from 24 yards in the third and from 20 yards for a record-breaking fifth time in the final period.

Jacke subsequently closed out the season with 205 career points, becoming only the 21st player in Packer history to score 200 points.

THE 1991 PACKER DRAFT

A PIECE OF CAKE

Lee Remmel

It isn't often a team can emerge from the National Football League draft "eating its cake and having it, too," as the venerable cliche runs.

It would appear, however, that the Packers pulled off just such a highly digestible parlay in this year's 56th annual selection meeting, as the NFL's draft is formally known.

Admittedly, the jury is still out. But the possible "profit" for the Green and Gold from their first round maneuvers is no less than intriguing.

This potentially happy state of affairs came about with the timely and voluntary cooperation of the Philadelphia Eagles, who made an opportune phone call—and an offer the Packers couldn't refuse—during the opening round.

Put through to Executive Vice President Tom Braatz in the draft room as the Packers were "on the clock" to make the eighth selection of the day, the call volunteered Philadelphia's first round selection in 1992—with the stipulation that the Eagles be allowed to exchange positions with the Packers in the first round then in progress. They would thus exercise Green Bay's eighth choice, with the Packers dropping down to Philadelphia's No. 20 position.

And that, of course, is precisely what happened.

Braatz, he was later to say, had found the proposal well nigh irresistible.

And one national draft pundit gave the transaction a sweeping endorsement—from the Packer perspective—calling it "the steal of the draft."

The Packers proceeded to supplement that '92 acquisition by using the first round position secured from the Eagles to select one of the most talented athletes on the board, defensive back Vinnie Clark of Ohio State.

Defensive backfield coach Dick Jauron, understandably enthusiastic over acquiring a big cornerback who has been clocked at a brisk 4.33 seconds in the '40,' describes Clark as "a rare combination of size, speed and athletic ability."

An All-Big Ten Conference nominee following the 1990 season, the 5-11-1/2, 189-pound Cincinnati native registered a league-high six interceptions and knocked down four other passes. He also recovered three fumbles and caused another while recording 52 tackles overall, including 36 solos.

The selection of Clark launched the heaviest Packer emphasis on defense in nearly a decade. Braatz and Head Coach Lindy Infante, working in concert, opted to follow with two more defensive choices, thus falling just short of Forrest Gregg's first Packer draft in 1984, when he went to defense with the first four picks.

Intent upon upgrading the defensive line overall and the pass rush in particular, Braatz and Infante tapped Esera Tuaolo, a cat-quick nose tackle from Oregon State, in the second round, and Badger native Don Davey of the University of Wisconsin, 1990's Big Ten sack leader, with a third round selection obtained in a trade which sent Green Bay's third and fifth round choices to the New York Jets.

The 6-foot-2, 280-pound Tuaolo, ranked third among the nation's nose tackles by Packers scouts, was the Pac-10 Conference's "Defensive Player of the Year" as a junior in 1989 and closed out his Oregon State career with a school record 14 sacks despite having played hurt throughout the 1990 season with a knee injury. Tuaolo's 23 tackles behind the line of scrimmage, as well as his 27.5 quarterback pressures, also were all-time OSU records.

Davey, the possessor of impressive statistical and academic credentials—as well as a highly developed work ethic—had been a key figure on the Badgers' defensive line since his freshman year, climaxing his collegiate career by earning consensus All-Big Ten first team honors as a senior after leading the conference in sacks.

A four-time Academic All-American—the first in NCAA history—he established a University of Wisconsin career record with 49 tackles behind the line of scrimmage, eclipsing the previous mark of 43 set by Dave Ahrens (1977-80).

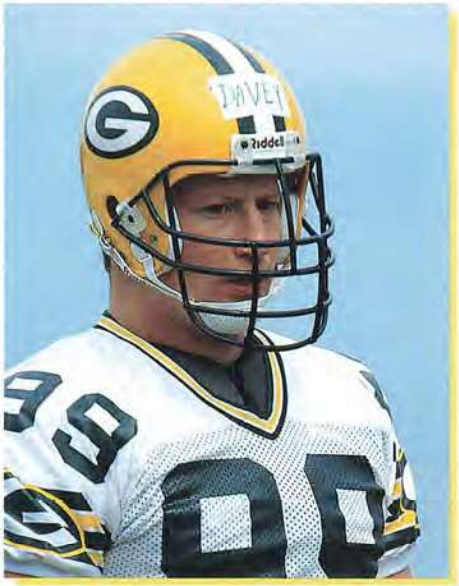
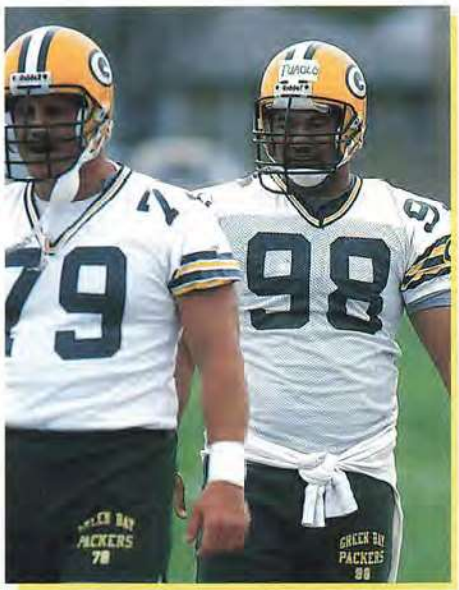
1-From Philadelphia. 2-From NY Jets. 3-From San Francisco. 4-From Miami. 5-From Miami. 6-From Cleveland.



LEFT: The University of Wisconsin's Don Davey, the Manitowoc, WI native, made their first selection in the third round of the 1991 draft, led the Big Ten conference in quarterback sacks and also set a school career record with 49 tackles behind the line of scrimmage. He also is the first four-time Academic All-American in NCAA history.

RIGHT: Nose tackle Esera Tuaolo (No 98. flanking veteran Bob Nelson), the Packers' No. 2 choice, set a collection of career records at Oregon State, among them 14 quarterback sacks, 23 tackles behind the line of scrimmage and 27.5 quarterback pressures.



The Packer brain trust decided to take a bit of a gamble with a second pick in the third round, this one by way of a trade with the San Francisco 49ers, selecting running back Chuck Webb of Tennessee.

Webb, who became available to Green Bay when the Packers traded their fourth and fifth round selections to the 49ers for San Francisco's third round pick, had been a consensus All-America first team pre-season selection for 1990 before suffering a knee injury in the Volunteers' second game of the season and being sidelined for the balance of the year.

The year before, when he was named to the All-America freshman team by The Poor Man's Guide, he had been a genuine standout, finishing second in the Southeastern Conference and eighth in the nation with 1,236 rushing yards and 12 touchdowns on 209 carries, an imposing 5.9-yard average per attempt.

Although conceding the choice involved something of a calculated risk, Infante noted, "The prognosis is he will recover fully. That means he'll have the same quickness, agility and strength that he had before, that he will not be a risk once we get him...back to 100 per cent...It's one of those situations that could be very good for us."

Left: Center/guard Joe Garten, the Packers' second selection in the sixth round, was named to no fewer than five All-America teams following his senior year. The 6' 2". 286 pound Californian allowed only one sack over his last two seasons covering more than 1,200 plays.

Right: Left-footed Jeff Fite, the Packers' fifth round draft selection, is considered a serious contender for the punting assignment. He averaged 40.2 yards for 247 career punts at Memphis State, with an outstanding overall net mark of 37.4 yards. If successful, he would become the first since Randy Walker held the job in 1974.

In the fifth round, Braatz and Infante moved in another direction, electing to intensify competition for the punting assignment by drafting Jeff Fite of Memphis State, a left-footed specialist who had averaged 40.2 yards for 247 career punts, with an outstanding overall net mark of 37.4 yards.

Fite was particularly appealing, Infante pointed out, because he also is a skilled holder, a talent which has helped entrench incumbent Don Bracken, the Packers' resident punter since midseason of 1985.

A consistent running back, Walter Dean of Grambling, and an All-America center, Joe Garten of Colorado, were harvested in the sixth round.

Dean, an accomplished all-around athlete with the quickness to play tailback and the upper body strength to carry the heavy load at fullback, rushed for 3,328 yards during his Grambling career—only 121 yards short of the school record (3,449) by Robert Parham (1977-80). Timed at 4.6 seconds in the '40,' he also is an effective receiver coming out of the backfield, averaging 13.1 yards for 15 receptions as a senior.

Garten, 6-2 and 286 pounds and a four-year starter, allowed only one sack and had been called for only two penalties in the last two seasons (over 1,200 plays). He was named to no fewer than five All-America teams following the 1990 season, including the Associated Press, Football Writers Association of America, Football News, Kodak and The Poor Man's Guide to the NFL Draft.

The focus returned to defense in the seventh round, which saw the Packers select a pair of linebackers, Frank Blevins of Oklahoma and Reggie Burnette of Houston, in order, Blevins coming to Green Bay by way of last October's trade with Cleveland, which sent running back Brent Fullwood to the Browns in exchange for their seventh round selection in this year's draft.

A versatile athlete, Blevins moved to defensive end from linebacker as a senior and was having an outstanding '90 season before suffering a shoulder injury that forced him to miss the Sooners' final five games. He finished the year with 19 tackles (17 solos) and a pair of fumble recoveries while intercepting two passes and deflecting three others. A year earlier, the 6-4-1/2, 232-pound Texan had been a first team All-Big Eight Conference choice, starting all season at strongside linebacker and leading the team with 114 tackles (57 solos), including seven sacks for 32 yards in losses.

Burnette, 6-1-1/2 and 235 pounds, is a fine all-around athlete who made an effortless transition to linebacker after beginning his collegiate career as a running back. Versatile enough to play both the inside and outside positions, he was an All-America first team selection by The Poor Man's Guide to the NFL Draft following the 1990 season. Burnette led Houston in sacks with 12, closing out the season with 71 tackles (51 solos). His production included 22 tackles for 127 yards in losses.

Springing something of a surprise, Braatz and Infante tapped a two-sport athlete, wide receiver Johnny Walker of Texas, in the eighth round.

Walker, who was playing minor league baseball at Bradenton, FL in the Atlanta Braves' farm system the day he was drafted, was the No. 2 receiver in University of Texas history. He ended his collegiate career with 114 catches for 1,567 yards.

Johnny had batted .444 in his first 10 games as a rightfielder for the Bradenton club and said he hoped to play both professional baseball and football, but Infante indicated Johnny needs to choose between the two, noting, "I don't see him being able to learn our offense after the season starts."

The Packers selected a second Wisconsin native in the ninth round, inside linebacker Dean Witkowski of North Dakota, who hails from North Fond du Lac, WI. An explosive hitter, Witkowski led North Dakota's defense with 185 tackles in 1990, earning All-America first team selection by The Poor Man's Guide. He augmented his imposing tackle total by causing two fumbles, recovering one and deflecting six passes.

The Green and Gold recruited one of the country's fastest collegiate linemen in the tenth round, Rapier Porter of Arkansas-Pine Bluff, who at 275 pounds could well become one of the most imposing tight end candidates in the NFL. Porter, who was clocked at an impressive 4.79 seconds in the 40-yard dash, averaged six knockdown blocks per game and received an 88 per cent grade for blocking consistency while playing a major role in the success of the Golden Lions' running game, which produced a 100-yard rusher in every game.

The Packers added a seventh defensive performer in the eleventh round, Central Michigan end J. J. Wierenga. At, 6-3 and 276 pounds, he was an All-Mid America Conference first team choice who started every game at defensive tackle, recording 38 stops with four sacks for 15 yards in losses.

Linzy Collins, the final selection, 6-0-1/2 and 185 pounds, set Missouri career records with 102 career receptions, 1,760 yards and six 100-yard games. An All-Big Eight Conference first team selection, Collins also established school season records in 1990 with 56 catches and 957 yards.

TO 'B' OR NOT TO 'B'?

LINDY LIKES NFL'S FREE AGENCY SYSTEM

Left: 'Local' Boy: Tackle/Center Glenn Derby, the ex-New Orleans Saint signed during this year's Plan B program, is a home-grown product. An Oconomowoc, WI native, he was a starter on the University of Wisconsin-Madison line anchored by Paul Gruber.

Right: Running back Allen Rice, surveying the practice field scene during mini-camp, was one of the Packers' major Plan B acquisitions. The former Viking is an eight year veteran who has accounted for more than 2,400 yards and has been productive in postseason play.

After three years of operation, varying perceptions have developed of Plan B, the National Football League's version of free agency.

Translation: Some NFL head coaches and personnel gurus are fond of it, some aren't.

Count Lindy Infante, the Packers' astute and pragmatic headmaster, among the former. He made his position unmistakably clear when a question concerning the merits of the system surfaced during the Packers' 1991 stockholders' meeting in late May.

The query, posed by a shareholder/fan, pondered whether it has been worth the financial investment.

Responding with alacrity, Infante asserted, "If you don't play in Plan B, in my opinion, you're going the wrong way. Because, once you put those players out there in Plan B—and the better we get, the more of our players are going to be taken in Plan B—if you don't go out there and replenish those players, you are then taking a step in the other direction.

"It's something that's there, and whether or not you can actually see results in the football team getting better—if you didn't play, you would see the team get worse. Because the first thing you don't have is competitive people in training camp. And if you don't have competitive people in training camp, where you have competition, and competition brings out the best in everybody no matter what line of work you're in—when you compete, you find out what you're made out of.

"In Plan B, you don't go out and get Pro Bowl players, generally," the Packer coach admitted. "But you go out there and you fulfill needs in Plan B, you upgrade your training camp in Plan B. Two years ago, if my numbers are correct, I think we had eight guys in Plan B, something like that. Last year, we only had two make it in Plan B. We signed 20, I think, the first year, 13 last year, 13 this year."

Infante added that he had, that very day, attempted to project how many of this year's 13-player "B" crop might make the Packers' final 47-man roster.

"After seeing the two mini-camps compared to the players we have here now, I said where—based on who we have and what we just acquired—how many of these guys, potentially, could make this team. The number I came up with was seven. I said I could conceivably, on the far end of it—I mean this is way out there, okay—the largest number I could see of the 13 guys we've signed in Plan B making it was seven. It could be as little as two or three. But if you've got two guys, or three guys who are going to beat out somebody you have, you've gotten better."

The Packers' experience with the program substantiates Infante's assessment. It has been, on balance, a positive one. This may be traceable to the fact that the Green and Gold have been more active in the "B" market from the inception of the system than any of the NFL's 27 other clubs, obviously increasing the odds of success.

Each year, they have led the league in signings from this pool—20 in 1989 and 13 in both 1990 and 1991. Of these 46, eight remained on the team's roster as the Packers opened their '91 training camp at St. Norbert College.

The common denominator among the eight, as might be expected, is that all but one of them has made a contribution to the cause. And five of the eight are or have been starters.

Blair Bush, for example, became the Packers' starting center in 1989 after being made available by the Seattle Seahawks, helping the packer offense forge the second most productive season in team history, and last year served as a flawless long snapper after requesting a reduced role.

Guard Billy Ard, an ex-Giant, center James Campen, a former Saint, and fullback Michael Haddix, previously an Eagle, also added via Plan B in '89, became starters last year in their second Packer seasons.

Ard started 15 games at left guard, Campen all 16 while grading out as the most consistent member of the offensive line, and Haddix emerged as the team's leading rusher.

Jerry Holmes, the slender ex-Lion acquired in 1990's Plan B program, proved an opportune addition when he stepped in as the starter at right cornerback following the injury loss of veteran Dave Brown and went on to share the team's individual interception honors with three thefts.

Another '90 acquisition, sure-handed Clarence Weathers, who most recently had been a Cleveland Brown, also proved to be a productive performer, closing out the season as the team's No. 4 receiver with 33 catches.

Wide receiver Carl Bland, a former Detroit Lion plucked from the 1989 "B" pool, again made his presence felt on special teams, emerging as the fourth ranking tackler among Packer kamikazes for the second year in a row.

THE JURY, NECESSARILY, is still out on 1991's acquisitions, easily the most prominent of whom is Mike Tomczak, the former Chicago Bear who adds an important dimension to the quarterback picture because of his successful background as a starting field general.

The 28-year-old Tomczak, 6-1 and 195 pounds, compiled a 23-11 record as a starter with Chicago and was the only Bear quarterback to have won a playoff game since the 1985 Super Bowl season, having led the Monsters of the Midway to a fog-shrouded victory over the Philadelphia Eagles in 1988 and to a 16-6 win over the Saints last January.

This year's Packer harvest included another playoff veteran, running back Allen Rice of the Vikings, an 8-year pro who accounted for 2,410 all-purpose yards in seven seasons with Minnesota.

The current crop also features two home-grown products—offensive guard/tackle Glenn Derby of Oconomowoc, WI, and linebacker Kurt Larson of Waukesha, WI, a Michigan State alumnus who spent the last two seasons with the Indianapolis Colts.

The 6-foot-6, 290-pound Derby is one of three offensive linemen to be acquired in the "B" quest, having joined ex-Dallas Cowboy guard/tackle Louis Cheek, 6-6 and 295, and tackle Scott Jones, a former New York Jet, 6-5 and 282 pounds.

This year's contingent also includes a "returnee," linebacker Greg Clark. Signed by the Packers in 1990's Plan B, he subsequently was released and joined the Rams, for whom he became a special teams standout, leading the Rams suicide squads in solo tackles last season.

Derrick Douglas, one of three running backs acquired by the Packers in Plan B, set a school rushing record at Louisiana Tech before being selected in the sixth round of the 1990 draft by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The other "B" additions:

- Cornerback Roland Mitchell, 5-11 and 180, of the Atlanta Falcons;
- Cornerback Ventson Donelson, 5-11 and 180, of the New England Patriots;
- Fullback Derrick Douglas, 5-10 and 205, of the Tampa Bay Bucs;
- Safety Tim Hauck, 5-11 and 185, of the Patriots;
- Tight end Brian Kinchen, 6-2 and 232, of the Miami Dolphins;
- Running back/kick returner Vai Sikahema, 5-9 and 184, of the Phoenix Cardinals.

Mitchell, rated by Packer coaches and the team's personnel department as one of the top two cornerbacks in this year's Plan B, started the first two games of the '90 season for the Falcons and played in 13 overall. He was involved in 24 tackles, registered 2 interceptions and was credited with breaking up 6 other passes.

The 26-year-old Cheek, a three-year veteran, was an eighth round draft selection out of Texas A & M by Miami in 1988. He played in 25 games as a Dolphin rookie and 13 games in 1989 before becoming a Plan B free agent in February of 1990 and signing with Dallas. He subsequently played in four games for the Cowboys last season, was released in mid-December and signed with the Eagles, for whom he started at guard in their season finale at Phoenix.

Derby, a starter on the University of Wisconsin-Madison line anchored by Paul Gruber, played in four games for the Saints last season, backing up Steve Trapilo at right guard. A three-year veteran, he had seen action in three of the Saints' final four games of the '89 season.

Jones, the other offensive line addition, was a 12th round draft selection of the Bengals in 1989 and made the Cincinnati roster that season. He was injured most of the 1990 season after being dealt to the New York Jets in September.

The 6-foot-4, 244-pound Larson is attempting to follow in the footsteps of fellow Waukesha native John Anderson, a Packer standout at linebacker for 12 seasons prior to his retirement following the '89 campaign.

Larson, already assigned Anderson's old number 59, poetically, saw action in 16 games with Indianapolis last season and finished fourth on the club with 11 special teams tackles. A versatile performer, he was utilized in a tight end role during the middle of the season and also served as the team's backup placekicker. He was the Colts' eighth round selection in the 1989 draft.

Larson's fellow Plan B linebacker, Clark, managed to emerge as the Rams' leading special teams tackler despite missing the last five games of the season with a leg injury. The former Arizona State athlete, 6-0 and 232 pounds, was involved in 18 tackles, 16 of them unassisted.

Douglas, a sixth round draft selection by Tampa Bay in 1990 after setting a school rushing record at Louisiana Tech, gained 34 yards in 16 attempts in pre-season play before being waived by the Buccaneers on the final cutdown. He later was re-signed to the practice squad and subsequently activated for the last two games of the season but did not see action.

Hauck, a University of Montana product, saw some service as a nickel back as a rookie in 1990 but was employed primarily in kick coverage by the Patriots.

The 26-year-old Kinchen, a 12th round draft selection of the Dolphins in 1988 out of LSU, appeared in 36 games over his three seasons with Miami.

Donelson, New England's 12th round choice in the 1990 draft, suffered a broken wrist during the Patriots' third preseason game and spent the regular season on injured reserve. He had been the starting right corner for his last two years at Michigan State.

Michael Reinfeldt, the Packers' new chief financial officer, discusses negotiation strategy with Packer President Bob Harlan in his Lombardi Avenue office. One of Reinfeldt's primary responsibilities is negotiating all player contracts.

Reinfeldt Likes A CHALLENGE

Tom Silverstein
The Milwaukee Sentinel

When Packers President Bob Harlan went out looking for some front office help last fall, he knew he had to find someone who could count numbers and balance books.

No one had been hired to replace Harlan after the former executive vice president of administration was appointed to the top position in the Packers corporation in June of 1989. Most of his former duties had been split among different executives in the organization.

Harlan felt it was time to consolidate those duties and fill the position of chief financial officer. At the same time, he needed someone who could deal with people, someone who had been around the block in the National Football League.

Creating the position seemed a lot easier than filling it until a friend at NFL Properties suggested Harlan call Mike Reinfeldt, an associate athletic director at the University of Southern California. Not long after the two men talked, Reinfeldt became the No. 1 candidate for the position.

"We had about 85 applications sent in," Harlan said. "After meeting Mike and talking with him, I felt he was the No. 1 person. He was way above No. 2 and No. 3.

"He understood football and that was important. He had negotiated contracts, too. The others had good financial backgrounds but they weren't as experienced in football. He was the No. 1 guy, but my main concern was getting him to work for us."

Harlan was in luck though. Had he opened the position two years earlier, or perhaps two years later, he may never have found Reinfeldt. But his timing was perfect.

Reinfeldt was a man on the rise in his profession, still searching for the ideal situation to suit his talents. Despite his youth, the now 38-year-old Reinfeldt had some experience in almost every aspect of sports finance and seemed well-suited for the job Harlan was offering.

"I gave it some thought because obviously the environment I was in was very comfortable," said Reinfeldt, a Baraboo native who had graduated from UW–Milwaukee. "But I wanted to talk with the Packers to see if I could do the job. I liked the way they were headed and how they were getting there."

It was a difficult decision for Reinfeldt, but in the end the chance to work in the Packers organization and return to his home state weighed heavily in his decision. So did Harlan's decree that he would stand behind his new man's work and not interfere when it was unnecessary, particularly in contract negotiations.

"When I did contracts I always appreciated the fact that agents could not go over my head to the Judge (Robert Parins)," Harlan said. "They might complain that they weren't getting anywhere with me, but he wouldn't interfere.

"I liked that policy and I told Mike that I would never let somebody go over his head to me. I would send them right back to Mike. I think he appreciated that."

Reinfeldt took the job and began work in mid-January. His primary duties now are making sure all unsigned veterans and rookies are in training camp on time.

It will be a challenge as the Packers are painfully aware. Last year, holdouts accounted for 307 days of missed training camp and the result was an ugly 6-10 season. The pressure is on Reinfeldt to avoid last year's mistakes.

In a way, it is appropriate that Reinfeldt has landed in this challenging position. His life has been full of challenges, most of which he accepted on his own accord.

One of the first came upon his graduation from college. Though he had played for a moribund Panthers football program in Milwaukee from 1971-74, Reinfeldt decided there was a place for him in the National Football League.

He was not drafted, but later signed as a free agent with the Oakland Raiders. He only played in two games for the Raiders, missing the entire '75 season with an ankle injury.

The Raiders tried to sneak him through waivers in September of 1976, but Houston snatched him up. Though his stay was short, Reinfeldt's time with the Raiders would prove invaluable in his post-football career.

At Houston, Reinfeldt developed into a polished free safety. In his second full season with the Oilers, he made five interceptions and two years later, in 1979, he led the league with 12.

At the time, only three other players in league history had totaled more interceptions in one season. And since that year, only one other player–the Raiders' Lester Hayes (13 in 1980)–has topped Reinfeldt's total.

"I was playing really well," recalled Reinfeldt. "It was like playing golf and you hit every shot and you know you're going to hit every shot. That's the way the whole season went."

Though the Oilers lost to Pittsburgh in the AFC Championship game, Reinfeldt was rewarded for his season by being named to the Pro Bowl team. It was the high point of his career, but also a turning point.

Two years earlier, after his first season in Houston, Reinfeldt had been a restricted free agent. He was free to negotiate with any team in the league, but Houston had the right to match any offer.

In a way, Reinfeldt is a pioneer of free agency. He was one of the first three players to receive an offer under the NFL's plan of provisional free agency. Only two players have changed teams under that plan.

If anything, the free agency status opened Reinfeldt's eyes to his true value to the Oilers. The '79 season confirmed that feeling.

That was particularly obvious before the 1981 season when Reinfeldt held out of camp in a bitter dispute with the Oilers. Head Coach Ed Biles threatened to trade him after discussions broke down.

"The team had so many more tools on their side in negotiations," Reinfeldt said. "Players didn't know what others were making.

"I would not characterize myself as militant, but I had a certain idea of what was fair."

If he was not militant, then Reinfeldt was at least a scrapper. He sat across from General Manager Ladd Herzeg and negotiated his own five-year deal in 1982.

What's more, he filed two grievances against the club a few years later when he felt he was being cheated. The first grievance had to do with bonus money he believed he was owed during the owners' lockout, in 1982. The second grievance pertained to him being waived while injured in 1983.

Though it took several years for each case to be decided, Reinfeldt won both.

While Reinfeldt's career on the field was winding down, his career off it was just taking off. While on the sidelines with a broken leg in 1982, Reinfeldt worked on his master's degree in finance at Houston Baptist University.

Not long after being waived from the Oilers in the fall of 1983, Reinfeldt received a call from an old friend. It was Raiders owner Al Davis.

Reinfeldt remembered Davis as the guy who gave him a 10% raise in salary his rookie season for no other reason than the fact Reinfeldt was making the league minimum wage. "Nobody on my team makes the minimum," Davis told him.

This time, the Raiders' owner wanted some information on a linebacker he coveted. At the end of the conversation, he asked Reinfeldt what he was doing now that his career was over. After Reinfeldt told him he was considering some offers from different banks, Davis offered him a job.

Reinfeldt thought about it long and hard before deciding it was the right move.

"I think the basic thing I learned from Al Davis is his intensity and his loyalty to his players and staff," Reinfeldt said. "He has a complete dedication to football. He's very much of a working owner.

Reinfeldt makes a pertinent point during a business trip to the practice field.

"But there's some frustration with the Raiders. Nothing happens until he interacts and it gets his OK. It's great for him. But I think you need to delegate authority. It's kind of a stifling environment."

Still, Reinfeldt learned a lot about football, particularly the art of negotiating player contracts. As the Raiders' chief operating officer, he handled most of the player's contracts and all of the team's radio and television deals.

Reinfeldt decided in 1988 that he needed more.

"I needed to broaden what I could do," he said. "If you envision yourself in the same spot 10 years from now then something's wrong."

When he was approached for a job in the athletic department at USC, Reinfeldt accepted. At the time, he felt it would allow him to pursue his doctorate in business as well as open up other doors in the sports world.

Among his greatest accomplishments was keeping a $17 million budget at USC in the black for the three years. In this state, he would be considered a miracle worker.

Other achievements included radio and television packages that totaled more than $5 million.

Reinfeldt said he was happy at his position at USC, but recognized a new challenge when Harlan called last fall. Many more challenges face him in the future.

Near Miss: Broncos' quarterback John Elway just eludes an all-out Matt Brock during the Packers' 1990 season finale at Denver' Mile High Stadium.

THE MAKING OF MATT

Tim Froberg
Green Bay News-Chronicle

There's no place for beach bums in the National Football League.

In the case of ex-surfing fanatic Matt Brock, it took an embarrassing NFL-style wipeout during a wave filled rookie season before the massive Californian discovered that the key to unlocking his potential involved a commitment to the game he had previously ignored.

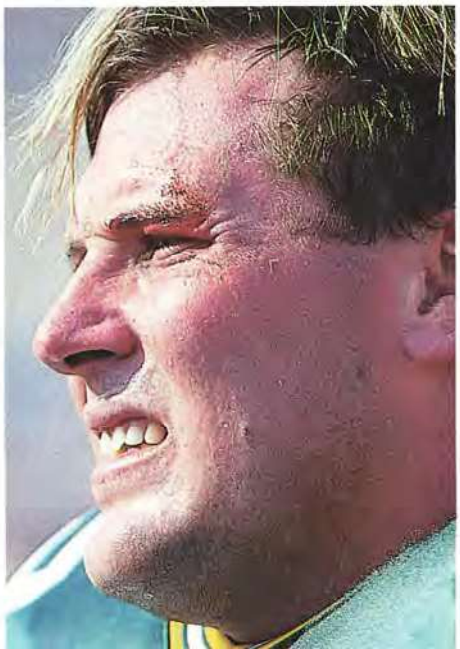
Brock, frustrated and humbled his first year in the pros, made a major growth spurt last season and was clearly the Packers' most improved player. The second-year pro from Oregon elevated his play to a dramatic new level, starting all 16 games at left end. Brock–showing good pass rush potential and toughness and tenacity against the run–tied for second in sacks (4) and finished sixth in total tackles (59). A year earlier. Brock had been an invisible man in Green Bay, contributing just three total tackles in a mop-up role.

Brock's evolution from sitter to starter began shortly after the '89 season. He bought a house in Green Bay and made the Packer weight room his second home. Pushed during off-season workouts by center James Campen, Brock bulked up 13 pounds in the off-season from 272 to 285. He reported to training camp not only heavier, but hungrier, with an appetite for production. The new and improved Brock was a smash hit during the preseason, earning a starting spot over the likes of Shawn Patterson, Blaise Winter and Plan B free agent Shawn Miller.

"It was a combination of the weight training–getting my body to where it should have been the first year–and the embarrassment of my rookie season," said Brock, a personable, easy-going sort. "I was really embarrassed for myself and wanted to prove I could play in this league. I probably should have been cut my first year. I really think so."

Packer defensive line coach Greg Blache has seen talented young men come and go. The ones that stick are the ones willing to work overtime.

Staying Involved: Brock, taking a breather on the bench, intently studies the offense's progress on the field. The second year pro started all 16 games last season and led the defensive line in total tackles with 59.



"It's a matter of realizing what it takes to be successful on this level," Blache said. "Matt did make a big jump last season and a lot of it had to do with his work habits. In college, he was able to get by on his natural ability and didn't need to lift weights to be dominant. Once he got to this level and saw how competitive and talented everyone was, he realized he had to hone his skills to be competitive and got in the weight room with Campen. It's really paid off for him."

Brock is the first to admit that he coasted on his considerable talent in high school and college.

"It all came fairly easy for me and it came to a point where I really didn't put that much effort into it because it came so easy," Brock said. "I went from 215 to 250 between my freshman and sophomore years in college and my 40-yard dash times went from 5.0 to 4.72. From there, I pretty much relied on natural talent and didn't lift like I should have. So I didn't improve that much.

'My dad (former NFL lineman Clyde Brock) kept telling me between college and the draft to get my butt in gear, that it's not as easy as you think. I'd just say: 'Yeah, yeah, I'm a natural. Don't worry about it'. Then, I got here and everyone had been an ex-star in college and the majority had a better attitude about their body and how to prepare it. It was a rude awakening."

Brock was taken in the third round of the 1989 draft out of Oregon, where he registered 19 career sacks and was an All-Pac 10 selection his senior year. Sports Illustrated had projected him as a first-round pick and Matt firmly believed that he would be one of the top two or three defensive ends taken. Thus, draft day dragged into a marathon of nerves for Brock and his family.

"I know you're not supposed to listen to all the draft hype and publicity, but I just got caught up in it," Brock said. "Everyone said I'd go in the first round or not later than the second and I got a big head. I borrowed money from my dad and bought a new car. Then draft day came and the first two rounds went by and I said: 'Better sell the car Dad. I've got to get a real job.'

"But I was relieved just to get drafted. My wife kind of freaked. Everyone said Green Bay was an NFL hell–with the weather and all that. But right now I don't think there's a better place to play pro football."

Brock grew up in a football family, but Matt's life never revolved around the game. Clyde, 6'-6", 300, now a transportation manager in San Diego, played 15 years professionally as an offensive lineman: five in the NFL with the 49ers and Cowboys in the early sixties. He then toiled ten years in Saskatchewan, where Matt spent his early childhood years.

"I wasn't like a typical player's son, hanging around the locker room all the time," Matt said. "I really didn't see much of my dad back then. He'd go to work as a personnel director at a hospital in the morning, then go to practice in the afternoon. He did that for 10 years. He didn't make big money playing football, I think the most he ever made in the pros was $35,000."

Matt had little interest in playing football as a child and his gridiron career had the humblest of beginnings.

"I tried to play Pop Warner football and I was the little fat kid who had to play with the older kids." Matt recalled. "I just got beat up. I quit and didn't play again until tenth grade."

Clyde eventually moved the Brock family to San Diego where Matt developed a zest for surfing and basketball in that order. Football was not a high priority.

"Yeah, I guess I was a beach bum for awhile," Brock said reminiscing. "My friends and I would get up at 6 a.m. and go surfing for an hour and a half before school. Then, we'd take off and try and get some surfing in at lunchtime. We'd usually miss our fifth class and make it back for football or basketball practice. My whole life was the beach."

Basketball came second, football a distant third. Matt, then 6-5, 205, averaged 18 points and 12 rebounds per game as a senior for University City High and made the all-California and all-San Diego teams, while attracting interest from Division II and III colleges. Brock remains an avid hoops participant and plays during the off-season with the Packer basketball team. He can still slam dunk and shattered a fiberglass backboard two winters ago during a game in Chilton, WI.

"I played basketball day in and day out in high school and I could really jump," Brock noted. "I really didn't like football. I just did it because my dad told me that if I played three sports, I wouldn't have to get a job. I wanted to go to college and play basketball. I really wasn't into football. It just kind of evolved."

Neither Matt nor his older brother, Mike, also a standout prep football player, was pushed into the game by Clyde. Matt, however, admits that he became closer with his father once he began playing the sport. Clyde is Matt's biggest fan and a regular but mild critic. He tapes Matt's games regularly off satellite television and offers constructive criticism. He also spends a few weeks in Green Bay during the season, observing Packer practices and games.

"He critiques me all the time and suggests moves on certain guys," Matt said. "Being a former offensive lineman, he knows what to look for. I don't give him any lip. He could still probably whip up on me. He keeps wanting to arm wrestle me. The last time we did two years ago, he beat me.

"He never pushed us into it, but subconsciously I think he's happy that one of his boys fell into it. He's still living football through me."

Matt met his wife, Jill, at Oregon his junior year. It was a two-year courtship, but Matt had to do some fast talking to get the wheels rolling.

"I saw her walking down the street and I said: 'I'm going to marry that girl'," Brock said with a grin. "That's the honest to God truth. She had just graduated and was going to Seattle in a few days to look for a job, so I had to work fast to get her to stay in Oregon for my senior year."

As a testament to his radically improved work ethic, Brock's off-season isn't spent lounging on a sunny beach in California, but in Green Bay where he has been one of the most active participants in the team's voluntary workout program. He fills his leisure time with basketball, golf, water sports and a new hair raising hobby: motorcycling.

"I just bought a Harley, a big 'Fat Boy' which is probably a good bike for a guy like me," Brock said.

He then quipped: "Tony (Mandarich) and Glenn (Derby) have Harleys too. Maybe we'll form our own gang and terrorize the town."

Brock is dead serious, however, when it comes to his career. He was encouraged with his progress last season, but far from satisfied.

"I got a little down on myself after the season because I don't think I continued to improve all season," he says. "I came out with a real good burst and kind of sustained it, but I really didn't get any better. I'm looking to be more of an impact player this season. I'm looking to be on an upswing all season."

Blache, while pleased with Brock's progress, feels he can become a dominating NFL defensive end.

"Matt's just scratching the surface on his talent level," Blache stated. "He can get a lot better. I don't know if he fully realizes yet, how good he's capable of being. If he ever does and works to get to that point, he can be utterly awesome."

And since working is no longer a problem, the awesome category is well within Matt Brock's reach.

Durable Defender: Right end Robert Brown, shown here zeroing in on Kansas City's quarterback Steve DeBerg in the Chief's visit to Green Bay, is one of the most durable players in the Packers' 72-year history, coming into the 1991 season. He has played in 133 consecutive "union" games.

BROWN HAS 'PERFECT' ATTENDANCE RECORD

The National Football League not withstanding, Robert Lee Brown comes into the 1991 season with a 'perfect' record—at least by his lights.

The veteran defensive end, now a 10-year professional, has dressed for every game (regular season, union contest) the Packers have played since he joined them as a fourth round draft selection out of Virginia Tech in 1982.

Put another way, the massive North Carolinian has played in 133 consecutive games, the longest such "union" skein by a Packer over the past decade.

Robert was not in uniform, however, for the three replacement games during the player strike of 1987. Thus, since the replacement games were official contests by NFL decree, the league has ruled that Brown's streak—and those of any other player who sat out the strike was broken during that period

And, in effect, Brown therefore started a new one when he and his fellow veterans returned to action following the end of the strike.

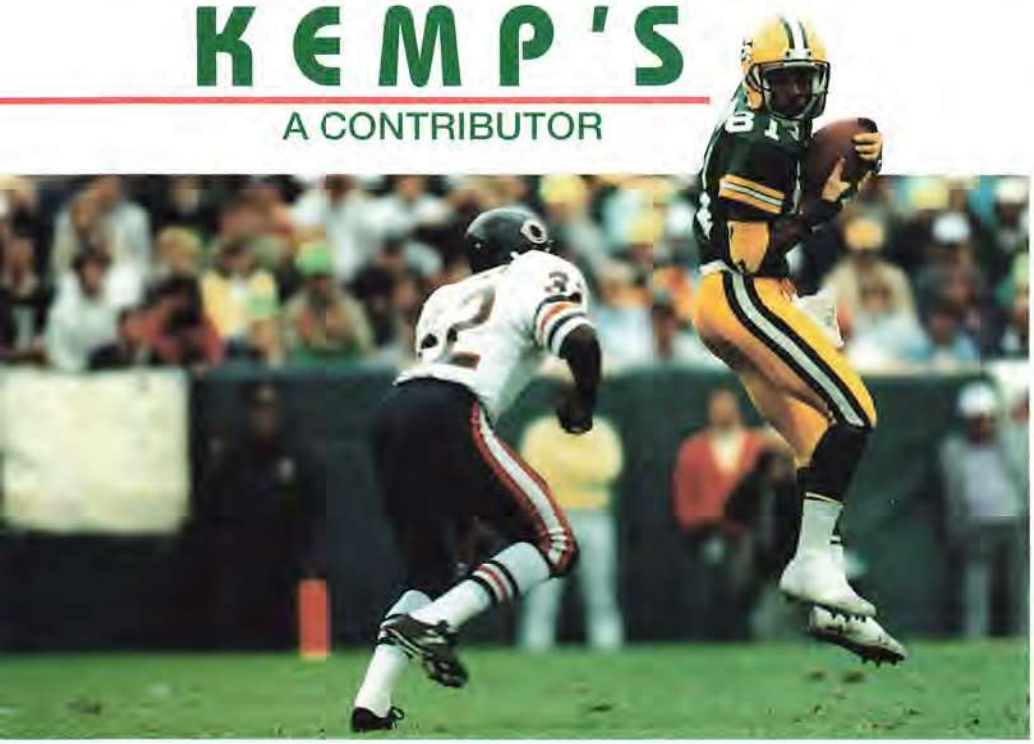
Be that as it may, he still owns—in company with teammates Ron Hallstrom, Timothy Harris, Rich Moran and Tiger Greene—the longest post-strike consecutive game streak on the Packer roster. All five begin the '91 season with matching 58-game strings.

Aside from Brown, Hallstrom held the longest union-game streak coming into the season, having dressed for 124 consecutive games.

For the record, the Packers' longevity mark belongs to Hall of Famer and former head coach Forrest Gregg, who put together a 187-game streak over a 14-year career in the Green and Gold (1956, 1958-70). Willie Davis (1960-69) and Larry McCarren (1973-84) are next up, each having played in 162 consecutive games.

KEMP'S

A CONTRIBUTOR



Perry Kemp, who invades the Packers' All-Time Top 20 list in receiving in 1990, makes one of last season's 44 catches, then looks for daylight as Bears' defender Lemuel Stinson closes in. Kemp has caught 140 passes in only three seasons and ranks 16th on the Packers' lifetime list.

Jim Hayes
Green Bay Press-Gazette

A blue-collar approach to playing a skill position has been Perry Kemp's method for surviving as a wide receiver with the Green Bay Packers.

Along the way, the same way of getting things done has turned Kemp into a model of consistency.

Kemp, who came to the Packers as an anonymous free agent in 1988 with only a marginal chance to make the team, has combined his knowledge of Coach Lindy Infante's offense with a willingness to tread into football's no man's land of crossing the middle to become one of Infante's most dependable players.

No, Kemp doesn't have the blazing speed or flashy moves of some of the Packers' other receivers. And although he plays a position where gifted athletes are commonplace, don't refer to Kemp as being a survivor in the presence of Buddy Geis, the Packers' effervescent receivers coach.

"A survivor is your fourth or fifth receiver, someone who beats someone else out to make your roster when he might be on the bubble," said Geis. "Perry Kemp is a starter. At one time he might've been a survivor. Now he's a legit starter. He's more than a survivor. He's a player with me."

The Packers' record book backs up Geis' claim. After catching 44 passes for 527 yards last season Kemp ranks 16th on the Packers' all-time list with 140 receptions.

Kemp said his ranking, which makes him No. 10 among wide receivers on the list, caught him by surprise.

"I never even thought about it until Lee Remmel (the Packers' public relations director) had told me," said Kemp. "I'm really thrilled about it. It's an accomplishment that I've made. My mom and everybody is proud of me for it and I'm proud of myself. I think to be listed in Packer history is a great honor."

But Kemp remains a survivor in another sense. Few other receivers in the league have walked away from as many fierce collisions on crossing patterns. Kemp's small frame and skinny legs—he's just 5-feet-11 and 165 pounds—make his ability to bounce back up even more impressive.

"I think I've already proven myself, especially with my ability to go over the middle which is not very common in this league," said Kemp. "I think that's what kind of sets me apart from most other guys.

"I'm not saying I like to be known for that, but that's my job. And I'm going to do whatever it takes to keep it."

Kemp entered training camp this year in a battle with Jeff Query and Charles Wilson, younger and faster receivers, to keep his starting job as the Packers' motion receiver opposite Pro Bowler Sterling Sharpe. Geis said Kemp's preparation and attention to detail, along with his reliable hands, are the reasons why Kemp has been a starter since late in the '88 season.

"He impresses you in everything he does," said Geis. "Nothing has been given to the kid. He works very, very, very hard. He's ready for the fight in training camp every year. He has great commitment and great determination."

Geis said durability and intelligence are other Kemp trademarks.

"You know that he's going to be out there practicing and he's going to go to battle every Sunday," he said. "He has the respect of the players because of the hits he takes in a game. He gives you his best all the time. That's Perry Kemp."

Perhaps the reason Kemp works so hard at being prepared is because he had to work so hard to prove he belongs in the NFL.

Kemp received only a sprinkling of attention from college recruiters while playing tailback and defensive back at Fort Cherry High School in the tiny town of McDonald, PA, Kemp accepted a Division II scholarship to California (PA) University. He became a starting wide receiver by the middle of his sophomore year after being recruited to play running back.

Speed, more often than not, is a key ingredient for being a wide receiver. And speed, or the possible lack of it, often raised doubts about Kemp's ability to excel in the NFL. But Kemp and Geis dismiss the issue as nonsense. Geis said last season that Kemp ran the 40-yard dash—football's measuring stick for speed—in a respectable 4.55 seconds.

"He has the speed to get deep and the knowledge to get deep," said Geis. "He's as fast as you need to be to play wide receiver in the NFL."

Nevertheless, Kemp said he ran a slow 40 time for a combine scout during his senior year in college. Kemp was bypassed in the NFL draft and signed with the Jacksonville Bulls after being selected in the 11th round of the 1984 USFL draft.

Jacksonville was the starting point for Kemp's roundabout journey to Green Bay. Infante was the Bulls' head coach, and Kemp became well versed in Infante's option-route passing game during his two-year stay in Florida. However, the USFL folded in 1986 and Kemp was cut loose after going to training camp with Dallas and Cleveland.

"I knew I was faster than what the combine scout timed me at," said Kemp. "When I went to Jacksonville they found out I was faster. After the USFL let out Dallas found out how fast I was. But after I sat out a year I kind of lost some of my speed. It's coming back a little bit more each year."

Kemp said he stopped working out and thought about quitting football altogether after being released by the Cowboys in 1986. But Infante was Cleveland's offensive coordinator in 1987 and the Browns invited Kemp to camp. Kemp was released, but re-signed with the Browns when Cleveland was signing up recruits for its strike-replacement team.

Once again, Kemp found himself without a team when the strike ended. He signed with the Packers on April 1, 1988, two months after Infante's arrival in Green Bay.

'When you come to a new team you're always worried about whether you're going to make it," said Kemp. "I worry about it even now. There's always somebody out there trying to get your job. You've got to come back ready to perform each year and keep fighting them off."

Kemp agrees that he doesn't look like a football player because he's so thin.

'I've always been thin so it doesn't bother me," he said. "I go out there and get the job done. I take my licks and I get up just like the next guy. The guys joke with me a little bit about being thin, but in the next breath they respect me for what I do."

Whereas Sharpe is the Packers' deep threat, Kemp works primarily as a possession receiver, making most of his catches over the middle and along the sidelines. But Kemp said he thinks he has the ability to be more explosive.

"I feel I can play with anybody," he said. "But sometimes you can only do as much as they let you do. I'm just playing my role. I think I'm capable of going out there and making a big play given the opportunity. Right now Sterling Sharpe is the man and I've accepted that."

Kemp's role limits the number of big plays he's likely to make. Geis said his role, along with his fluid running style, may give a false impression about Kemp's speed.

"All I hear is Perry's slow," said Kemp. "My speed isn't exceptional. To me, a 4.3 time in the 40 is exceptional. Jeff Query, Charles Wilson and LeRoy Butler all run that. But to me speed isn't everything or I wouldn't be able to get open. Technique is more important and how smart you are."

Said Geis: "Perry does all the little things. When you grade him out after a game, he grades out the highest."

Kemp said he takes pride in knowing his assignments and making the right decisions on the field.

"In this system you don't have time to think about what you have to do," he said. "You have to know different situations and react to them. If you take time to think about it, it's too late."

A thoughtful Kemp discusses his and the team's performance for the media during a post-game interview session, conducted in front of his Lambeau Field dressing room locker.

Geis said Kemp probably understands the Packers' offense better than any other player on the roster.

"I ask questions if I'm not sure about something or if I think something else will work," said Kemp. "That's the only way you get more knowledgeable, by asking questions, not just sitting back all the time. I really like studying the game."

Kemp's given name is Commodore Perry Kemp. He was named after his grandfather, but hasn't used his given first name since he was a youngster. "It's easier to say Perry," he said.

Kemp said he began playing organized football in first grade. Despite his slender frame, Kemp said football always was the sport he loved the most.

"I never got tired of it," he said. "I've always told myself, even when I was a little kid, that I was going to end up playing pro ball. This is a dream come true."

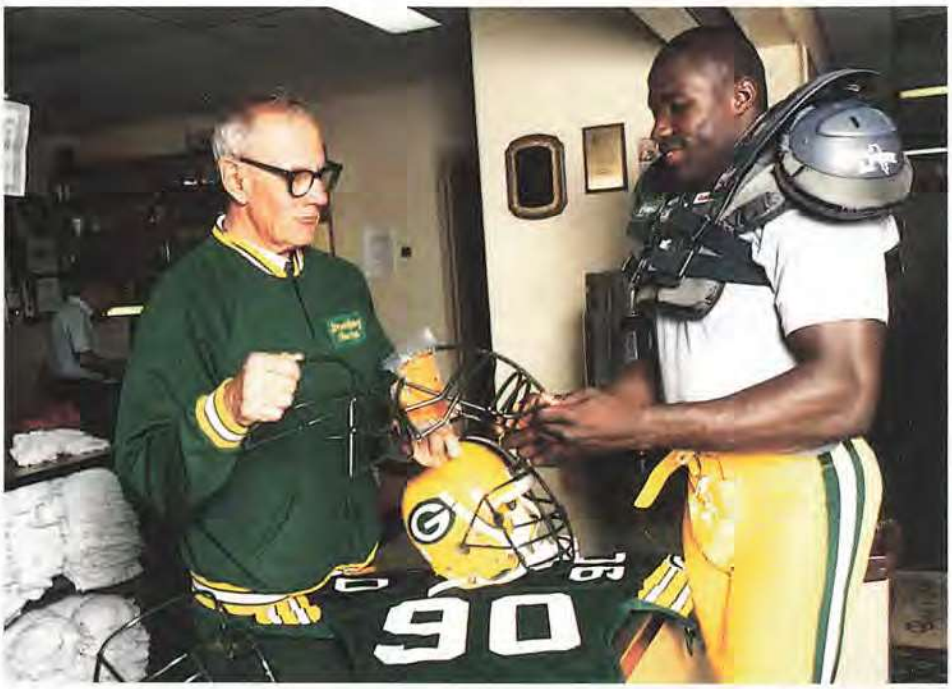
HEAD to TOE



Bob Noel, the Packers' veteran equipment manager, checks over gear he has issued to linebacker Tony Bennett.

Kevin Isaacson
Green Bay Press-Gazette

You'll probably never hear Bob Noel praised on national TV.

But Noel, a 40-year veteran of the Green Bay Packers equipment staff, isn't thirsting for acclaim. He says it comes every time Sterling Sharpe catches a pass, Tim Harris sacks a quarterback, Ken Ruettgers makes a key block.

"It's nice that something you've done might, in a small way, help get the team a win," said Noel.

Noel and assistants Bryan Nehring and Jack Noel spend the majority of their work weeks–as well as most of their weekends during the NFL season–in the bowels of Lambeau Field.

Their task: Outfit as many as 80 players with more high-tech protection than you can imagine.

Skin-tight jerseys. Pants altered to hide a knee brace. Cleats that give a lineman traction on ice. Perfectly fit helmets for everybody.

And mistakes aren't allowed.

"Somebody gets hurt and he didn't have the right equipment, well, you can bet we'll hear about it," said Noel.

Mostly, though, equipment work is quiet work. Noel's off-season is spent organizing and refurbishing the practice and game wear that crowds three ample storerooms at Lambeau Field. The particulars of each veteran's uniform–sizes of helmet, pads, facemask, pants, jersey–are dutifully recorded each year, saving time and increasing player satisfaction during the often hectic May minicamps and July training camp.

"It's just a process of being very organized and prepared, and Bob is great at that," said Nehring. "If you've done your homework, it can be just a process of getting them in one door and out the other."

Note the "can be."

Sometimes, putting a player on the practice field isn't that simple. Consider the task of outfitting, say, a new offensive lineman. A process which can also be expensive. Noel estimated that the cost of "dressing" the average lineman would come in at approximately $2,500.00 or slightly more than the overall, per-player average of $2,300.00

Start with the jersey, which linemen love to streamline. "Less for the other guy to grab onto, I guess," says Noel. Some players direct a seamstress through as many as three fittings before a satisfactory snugness is reached. Though all linemen and linebackers begin with the same cut of jersey, guard Rich Moran's game jersey bears little resemblance to that worn by any linebacker. The sleeves on Moran's No. 57 are sewn tight, barely leaving room for the average fan's arms. A girdle-like insert down both sides of a lineman's jersey provides a fit so tight that even cold, wet, muddy linemen often refuse to change to a clean jersey at halftime, simply because of the time and effort it takes to slip in and out. Still, each lineman is fitted for at least two home jerseys and two away jerseys, as well as practice wear.

That accomplished, a lineman must obtain two pair of practice pants and two pair of game pants, then agree on a facemask. Next, a trip past the myriad of pads that all linemen seem to love. Finally, if the player has been given medical clearance to make contact in practice, a helmet is issued. It must fit snugly, must apply pressure on the forehead pad, head pad, side pads and neck pad—and must not give the player a headache.

"You can spend a lot of time with them," said Noel. "When they finally get everything set, most like to keep it for awhile."

Ruettgers, for example, has worn the same game jersey in each of his five seasons. Veteran wide receiver Perry Kemp favors a facemask that is no longer on the market, so the equipment team is searching the nation for that model or something similar. Nehring admits it's extra work, but explains, "Vision is such a huge thing for a receiver, because they have to see the ball from a variety of angles, not just straight on. Perry Kemp likes his older mask, so we'll put time into it."

Similarly, many players request—and receive—the same helmet each season. That's possible only because the equipment staffers record each piece they distribute, dedication which makes for some incredibly long days during the May minicamps and training camp.

"When we can't give them their helmet back, it's probably because the helmet didn't pass recertification," said Nehring. "But, because it has to be a perfect fit, even something like a new style of haircut could throw it off enough to move up or down a size."

Yes, trend is a major factor in equipment change— especially when a new coach is hired. "A new coach means a lot of work," said a grinning Noel, who has worked under every Packers coach since Curly Lambeau. "I think every one of them changed something." Among alterations requested by Lindy Infante, and implemented before the 1989 season, were new game socks, addition of a stripe in the game pants and removal of the letter "G" from the jersey sleeve. Laments Noel: "Forrest (Gregg) puts a "G" on the sleeve. Lindy takes it off. Bart (Starr) changes a stripe on the neck of the jersey. They always change something."

But technology, not trend, forces the majority of equipment changes. Helmets and shoulder pads must undergo strict annual certification checks. When a player's padding is worn or decaying, improved models are quickly recommended. New, "more slippery" fabrics and blends are always on the jersey market. "Our responsibility is to try to keep these guys protected, to give them any edge," said Nehring. "If there's something that can make a difference, we've got to have it ready."

To wit, their preparations for out-of-town games include packing "everything we might not need," says Nehring, into an organized array of canvas bags, crates, steamer trunks, wood boxes and foot lockers. The load fills a 26-foot Allied Movers truck and, for cold-weather games, can weigh up to 7,000 pounds. No question that "having it ready" is a source of considerable pride to Noel and his assistants.

Brian Nehring, the Packers' assistant equipment manager, digs mud from the cleats of an unidentified player during the course of a home game.

A sampling:

- Nehring recalls creating a combination of cleats for Blaise Winter that helped the defensive lineman maintain traction on icy Soldier Field. "He was happy with it, really appreciated what we'd done for him," said Nehring.
- Jack Noel, who is Bob's brother, recalls kicker Chester Marcol's return to Wisconsin with the Houston Oilers in 1980. Signed after the Oilers had departed for Green Bay, Marcol faced playing in a uniform—No. 5—without his name on the back. Summoned to help by Houston staffers, the Noels cut letters out of extra Oilers name plaques to spell M-A-R-C-O-L, then had the letters sewn on the jersey. "Didn't look too good up close," said Jack, "but nobody in the stands knew the difference."
- Bob Noel revels in the quick work necessary to provide a No. 1 draft pick with a Packers jersey–complete with name and number–for his initial Green Bay press conference. "A lot of good, local help makes it work," he says. Noel, with Infante's approval, chooses an unclaimed number–often close to the top draft pick's collegiate number. He then orders a name plaque from Bertrand Marine & Sporting Goods, Inc., a long-time Packers equipment supplier, which can be printed and delivered in about an hour, if necessary. Finally, Doris Noel, wife of Jack, is summoned to sew the name plaque to the jersey.

The same system has worked during the season, when a player signed by Green Bay late in the week can't fit into any of the numbered uniforms available at Lambeau Field. Each spring, Bob Noel orders new jerseys from Sandknit in Berlin, WI. Numbers are silkscreened on most and shipped to Green Bay, but some jerseys remain in Berlin. . . just in case. At Noel's request, a jersey is quickly printed and shipped–"When we were really stuck, they've hand-delivered them," said Noel–with the corresponding name plaque ordered from Bertrand's, then sewn on locally.

"We're lucky we're not dealing with a lot of out-of-state companies," said Nehring. "We couldn't pull things like that off."

Miracle work aside, the equipment team's success feeds on simple, if unspectacular, organization. Witness the extensive planning and packing for away games, and include Noel's Lambeau Field storerooms, parts of which are filled floor to ceiling with out-of-date jerseys, old shoes, "anything I might need someday," he says.

But with new jerseys near $100 apiece, recycling suddenly seems sound. Old game jerseys become back-up game jerseys, then emergency game jerseys. After a few seasons on the practice field, they might be saved to repair the next practice jerseys.

"If you need one, you could take a sleeve off of it," says Noel, pointing to a decade-old model.

Rather than order new uniforms to implement Infante's changes, Noel ordered new sleeves, and had the sleeves sewn to existing jerseys. A full order of new game jerseys—home and away–could have cost close to $50,000.

Noel saves name plaques, too. When quarterback Randy Wright was released, his plaque was filed with handfuls of others–arranged alphabetically, of course. Last year–wouldn't you know it?–one of the Packers' free-agent signees was offensive lineman Charles Wright.

Pick out an unclaimed number. Look under "W" for the name plaque. After some quick sewing, the jersey is ready.

Time saved. Money saved.

Says Nehring: "Bob's something special. At age 66, you'd be hard-pressed to find a more dedicated or a better employee. I'm 31, and for me, it's hard to keep up, like I'm working with a college kid. To be that organized, with that energy . . . he's amazing."

Offensive linemen streamline their jerseys, thus giving defensive linemen "less to grab onto". Guard Rich Moran, has his sleeves sewn tight, barely leaving room for the average fan's arm. He and his colleagues also have a girdle-like insert down both sides of their jerseys.

Is Darrell Thompson "the one?"

The one, that is, to ignite the Packers' running game, something Head Coach Lindy Infante has listed as a major priority this1991 season.

The Packers, he is only too well aware, finished 26th among the National Football League's 28 teams in rushing last year, averaging a modest 85.6 yards per game.

And, invariably forthright, he has been characteristically specific in addressing this state of affairs while analyzing the task at hand.

"We need very badly," he said, "for somebody to be a 1,000-yard, or close to a 1,000-yard, rusher.

"We also need to have somebody step out there and say he's the guy who wants to stay on the field all the time so he can be that 1,000-yard rusher."

Since the Packers invested a precious first round choice in the impressively hewn Thompson in the 1990 NFL draft, Infante's observation spawned the inevitable question: Could Darrell Thompson be "the guy?"

Offensive backfield coach Willie Peete, his position coach,is sure "D.T." will rise to the obvious challenge.

And Darrell?

Though confident in his skills, the laid back Rochester, MN, native is disinclined by nature to make claims for himself.

In fact, it will come as a surprise, even to people who know him, that Darrell Thompson plays pro football for a living. He's quiet, unassuming, and works with kids in the inner city at Minneapolis during the offseason.

First of all, you know how pro football players are. Made, not born.

Who is this 6-1, 221-pound athlete wearing jersey No. 39 at Green Bay? What has he done? What can be expected of him?

"Let me tell you something," Willie Peete said. "I think Darrell Thompson is ready to take off. He's comfortable. He doesn't have to worry about thinking and being in the right place. It's going to be all reaction. Now, his athletic ability that he showed in college is going to take over."

When Darrell Thompson was a sophomore at the University of Minnesota in 1987, he had a game he will never forget. He exploded for 201 yards on 21 carries—against Michigan. After four years, he established the Gophers' all-time rushing record with 4,518 yards and 10 touchdowns.

The Packers liked those numbers. They liked his speed, his size. They selected Thompson in the first round of the 1990 draft, and then he sat. He sat and waited. He waited until the Packers unloaded Brent Fullwood, their problem child. When called, however, Thompson was only a shadow of what everyone expected.

Thompson was caught by surprise. He knew the Packers are a passing team. He knew his time would come.

What surprised him was how difficult it was adapting to Lindy Infante's offense. As one teammate said, Thompson was an instinctive runner but he was overloaded with the cerebral part of the game—his head was spinning.

"I didn't know what to expect," Thompson said. "It was like going from high school to college. There are so many things to learn—defenses, pass protection. There are so many things to think about.

"I began feeling comfortable in the second half of the season. But then we started losing, and that took so much away from it."

For most rookies in the league, it is difficult to adjust to a starting position in the NFL. The exception may be running backs, however, especially those picked in the first round.

Lindy Infante's decision to trade Fullwood opened the door for Thompson. It also told everyone that the Packers had faith in their first-round draft choice.

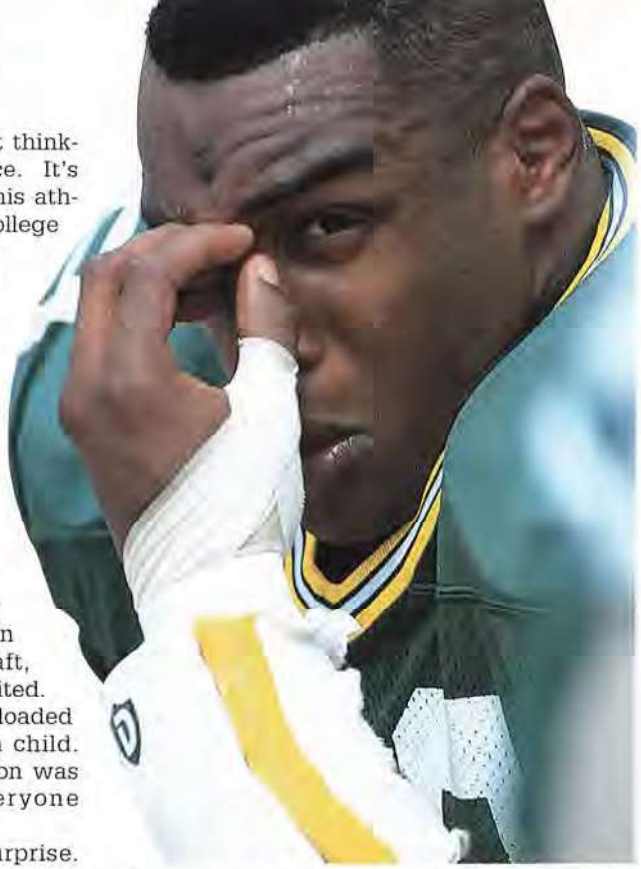
FIRST YEAR MEN: Walter Dean, 5'9", 211, Grambling; Derrick Douglas, 5'10", 210, Louisiana Tech; Allen Rice, 5'10", 208, Baylor; Vai Sikahema, 5'9", 191, Brigham Young; Chuck Webb, 5'9", 209, Tennessee.



A perspiring Thompson gets a bird's eye view of the on-field proceedings from the bench.

"That trade indicates to me that they must think he (Thompson) has a lot of ability," Bob Hollway, assistant general manager of the Minnesota Vikings, said after Fullwood left. "I haven't seen him as a receiver and that's going to be important in their offense. We'll have to see how well he fits into the passing game."

Thompson played in 14 games and caught only three passes. His last game against Denver was probably his best with 63 yards rushing on but six carries. But for the season, he contributed only 264 yards on 76 carries.

Why was it so difficult adjusting from the Big 10 to the NFL?

"The Gophers ran an offense that helped him," Peete said. "He was used strictly in a deep I, and they ran the option.

"We don't have the option at this level. They were able to run the option and give him the ball on the corner. When you give Darrell the ball on the corner, he can outrun a lot of people."

When Fullwood was sent packing after the fifth game of the 1990 season, the door was open for Thompson to take over. But the 6-1, 221-pound running back wasn't ready to take advantage of the situation.

There were extenuating circumstances in the shape of bigger and faster defenders.

"You don't have outside linebackers like Lawrence Taylor in the Big 10," defensive end Shawn Patterson said. "You don't have people like Reggie White, and safeties the size of David Fulcher. You can't expect somebody to come in here and master an entire offense and do everything in one day unless he's got an 'S' on the chest."

Peete said it wasn't all Thompson's fault. The Packers moved Thompson from halfback to fullback after five games because the fullback is the guy who gets the ball.

"The other thing the fullback has to do is pass protect," Peete said. "He didn't have to do that in college, not like he has to do here.

"On top of all of that, Darrell was a young guy who didn't want to make a mistake. He wasn't comfortable.

"He had tunnel vision. All he would see was what was happening in front of him. The more he played, his vision spread out."

One of the areas in Infante's offense that needs improvement is at running back. The coach hopes Thompson can step up and play a bigger role this season.

"He went through a good learning season," Infante said. "He flashed the running ability that we drafted him for. I think he has got to learn to pass protect. That is his biggest downfall.

"We're not just going to give it to him. He has to earn it."

Darrell Thompson wheels past Viking defender Reggie Rutland into the end zone for a second quarter touchdown which keyed a 24-10 Packer victory over Minnesota at Milwaukee County Stadium October 28. This first pro TD for the rookie running back came on a 12-yard run.

That's OK with Thompson. He has merely scratched the surface.

"I want to make a statement," Thompson said. "I want to play up to my abilities. I haven't done that. I want to be the best I can be." ©

AMERICA'S PACK

More than 1,500 fans, some of whom are shown above, turned out for the baptismal tailgate party, including loyalists from such points as Connecticut, New York, Missouri, Florida, California, Colorado and the Carolinas. One year later the membership has swelled to more than 7,300 including representatives from 10 foreign countries and all 50 states.

Al Pahl
Ray Nitschke's Packer Report

Was there really ever any doubt?

If there was ever any question concerning who really is "America's Team," it's been answered in the past year.

By America's Pack.

The first official national fan club dedicated to the Green Bay Packers shows quite convincingly the Packers are, indeed, America's Team. To wit:

- In its first 10 1/2 months, America's Pack grew from zero members to more than 7,300;
- The fan club had more than 4,000 members before it was even formal ly launched;
- More than 1,500 members attended the July 12 kickoff celebration on Lambeau Field's parking lot;
- An average of 3,000 members attended each 1990 America's Pack pre-game tailgate party in Milwaukee and Green Bay;
- Members hail from not only throughout the United States, but overseas as well. That has even given rise to at least one unofficial off-shoot: GBP, (Great Britain's Pack) — three crazy Englishmen who have even formed their own unofficial GBP Hall of Fame.

All of that in less than a year.

Surprising? Not necessarily.

"It didn't totally surprise me," Packer President Bob Harlan said. "I really felt from the start that the Packers were the type of team that could probably have as successful a fan club as anybody in this league.

"I still feel that way and the early results have indicated it's true."

Harlan, in the midst of his 20th year as a Packer employee, knows the team's fans well. And it is those fans, obviously, who have created the success of America's Pack. "It's amazing the fandom we have," Harlan said. "It's a unique situation and I think by starting this fan club, we're taking advantage of that."

In explaining "unique situation," Harlan started with Green Bay's size: "Sitting in a small city like this with all of the huge cities around us makes us unique," he began.

"An awful lot of people obviously got very hooked on pro football on TV in the 1960s when the Packers were the team to follow and the team of success, and the fans have just never forgotten.

"I think there are probably two comparisons: In college football, Notre Dame's situation is similar and in pro baseball, look at the Cubs' fans. There are Cubs' fans all over the world who, for one reason or another, follow the Cubs," noted Harlan, who grew up a Cubs' fan in Des Moines, Iowa, largely because the city had a Cubs' farm team. (Nonetheless Harlan's first job in professional sports came in the employ of the Cubs' arch-rivals, the St. Louis Cardinals.).

"We do fall in that unique category of the small city, the success in the past, our tradition is phenomenal," Harlan said. "People just love to associate with us and we appreciate it tremendously, too."

To find the genesis of America's Pack, "you've got to go back a couple of years ago to when we decided to start a marketing department and really get into it full-fledged," Harlan recalled. "We said we want to go through the full gamut of everything that's out there as far as marketing is concerned."

The Packers' first priority was establishing a retail store. That done, they looked into other areas and soon joined forces on the fan club with a marketing group out of Appleton, WI. "We've always felt," said Harlan, "because of the fandom we have throughout the world — not just this country, but throughout the world — that something like this had a chance to really become very, very popular.

"Even if you look at it, give it a try and if, for some reason, it wouldn't work, at least you've looked at it and given it a try."

That negative scenario, obviously, has not played itself out. "I'm very pleased with the first-year results," said Harlan. "I think the people who are members have totally enjoyed it and I can only see a good future for it."

The team's president is by no means stretching things when he makes reference to the international nature of Packer fans. America's Pack has at least 25 overseas members, while Ray Nitschke's Packer Report, a newspaper publishing 26 times a year devoted exclusively to Packer coverage, has 100 overseas subscribers.

And overseas Packer fans include more than just American workers or armed forces personnel. There are men like Dublin native and resident Tony McDevitt; and Yves Connan of suburban Paris, who holds the distinction of being the first overseas America's Pack member.

And then there are those three crazy Englishmen: Terry Ainsworth, Miles Warner and David Radcliffe. The residents of Lancashire (an English county) are members of America's Pack; call their local "chapter" GBP, for Great Britain's Pack; and have even started their own GBP Hall of Fame.

The trio staged the inaugural induction to their GBP Hall of Fame in February. Ainsworth, who met numerous past and present Packer personnel while attending Packer practices and two games during a month-long visit last season, inducted Ray Nitschke; Radcliffe nominated Don Hutson and Warner inducted John Anderson.

Great Britain's Pack was organized in December, according to Warner, who wrote, "The inaugural meeting was held in a pub in Lancaster, with all three members being present."

He added, "Had a reply from Lindy Infante recently. He is one good guy and also takes the time to send a handwritten note. I think this speaks volumes for him and it would sure be nice to see a class guy make the Packers a consistent winner."

While America's Pack members wait for that consistent winner to emerge, they have plenty of activities on their 1991 schedule:

The club is expanding its limited slate of 1990 road trips to include all 1991 road games. In fact, they are bringing in a professional travel group, Premier Groups and Incentives of Oshkosh, WI to handle all road trip planning. More information is available by phoning Premier, (800) 236-5095.

In addition to tailgate parties at all Green Bay and Milwaukee games again, America's Pack is planning parties for each road game as well. The parties will be open to all club members, whether they are part of the Premier-packaged tour or not.

America's Pack will have a major presence at The Great Green Bay Kickoff, July 25-28. That's a new Packer-centered celebration in and around Lambeau Field's parking lot. It is scheduled to include entertainment stages and vendors and timed to coincide with the annual Welcome Back Packers Dinner, Fan Photo and Appreciation Day and training camp's final intra-squad scrimmage.

The fan club is in the process of establishing a network of sports bars across the country where members can enjoy watching their favorite team each weekend. Dubbed Pack Quarters, these bars will provide members an oasis of Green 'n' Gold in the often hostile environment outside Wisconsin.

Packer President Bob Harlan welcomes charter members of America's Pack, the Packers' first official fan club, to kick off tailgate party on the parking lot of Green Bay's Lambeau Field last July.

America's Pack will host a special event December 8 in Lambeau Field, with proceeds benefiting Special Olympics. Members will pay a small fee to use Lambeau's club seating areas to view live TV coverage of that day's Packer game in Chicago. Details on related activities and additional opportunities at Lambeau that day remain to be worked out.

There will be a corporate membership plan for America's Pack this year, affording employers the chance to buy memberships and give them to either employees or customers.

America's Pack continues to add merchandise to its offerings and has established a retail store in Appleton's Spencer Village. The address is 2167 W. Spencer Street, Appleton 54914.

The fan club hosted a special 1991 Draft Day event at Green Bay's Midway Motor Lodge and plans a bigger, better event for 1992.

Sponsored by a club which went from 0 to 6,500 in its first 11 months, can there be any doubt 1992 will be bigger and better? ©

TRADITION

Tradition. It's something that's vitally important to the Green Bay Packers, and to Packer fans throughout Wisconsin and around the world.

From Lambeau to Lombardi to Lindy, the great tradition of Packer football has brought a lot of glory to Green Bay.

Another Packer tradition has spanned the generations in Green Bay: The 44 year partnership between the Packers and WNFL—Talk Radio 1440. Every year since 1947, WNFL has provided the hometown fans with year 'round Packer Coverage and the most complete, exclusive Packer Game Day coverage anywhere. The tradition continues this year with Packer Radio broadcasters Jim Irwin and Max McGee, and WNFL Sports Director Bill Scott.

The Man In The MIDDLE

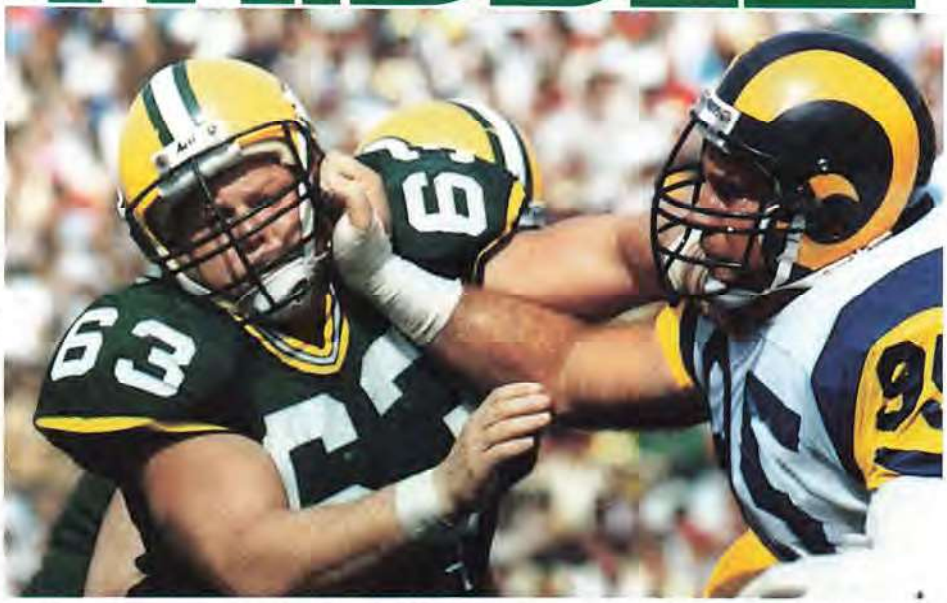
In the movie "Lethal Weapon," both the good guys and the bad guys kept their distance from the cop portrayed by Mel Gibson because he was just a tad off center with a tendency to go crazy without warning.

If the scenario for that movie had been the football field, James Campen would have been the perfect role model for Gibson. Campen is definitely an off-center center, the Green Bay Packers' lethal weapon from whistle-to-whistle who has added some color, and expertise, to a position that all too often has gone unnoticed.



Center James Campen, fending off Rams' defensive tackle Mike Piel in the season opener, grades out as the most consistent member of the Packers' offensive linemen last year as a first year starter.

How else do you explain a center who must have led the National Football League last season in downfield blocks thrown by an offensive lineman? When he wasn't running downfield, he was leading the league for most blocks thrown at the line of scrimmage when the ball carrier was already 20 yards past them. When the play was over, no matter if the ball carrier was on the other end of the field, Campen would run over and help him to his feet.

And when Campen got mad? Look out. During the final minutes of the Packers' road loss at Tampa Bay last year the Buccaneers' Tim Newton poked Campen in the eye. The two players had confrontations in the past, but that one blew a gasket somewhere inside Campen and it took several of his teammates to pull him off the field before he tried to rip apart Newton.

"Sometimes I get a little emotional, obviously," Campen understated. "But I think I have to play that way to be effective. It motivates me."

Campen drew a breath and smiled. As he began to speak, the enthusiasm rose in his voice as if he was readying himself to pound an opposing tackle. Newton's face came to mind.

"Sundays are so much fun," said Campen, as he explained why and how he plays the game in his own unique style. "It's such a blast. You get to hit somebody else. You get to be whoever you want to be for a couple of hours. You can be an ass, you can be a nice guy, you can be an animal. It's like going hunting and you can shoot whatever you want."

There certainly is a method to Campen's madness and the Packers and their opposition took notice last year. During a season when the Packers' offensive line had its problems, Campen, in his first year as a starter, remarkably was the anchor. His consistency was unmatched by anybody else on the line. USA Today columnist Gordon Forbes recognized him and placed Campen on his all-pro team.

"He's a great leader and he's starting to take that role on himself," said Packer offensive line coach Charlie Davis. "He's always been real energetic and a real plugger. But he's starting to see himself as the guy others are focusing on."

It was a long time coming for the 27-year-old Campen, who has been fighting critics of his 6-foot-2 inch frame ever since his days at Ponderosa High School in Sacramento when his team set a state record for the longest winning streak. Even after he filled out to a strong, well-built 275 pounds at Tulane, pro scouts questioned if he was big enough. They also wondered about his excessive energy and whether he could temper it.

After a solid collegiate career at Tulane, Campen had to talk his way into a free agent contract with the New Orleans Saints. He was cut during training camp in 1986 and sold cars for a Tulane alumnus until the Saints called him back for a tryout in 1987. That time he made the team, but the prospects for starting didn't look good because he backed up both Joel Hilgenberg and Steve Korte. After two years in New Orleans, he signed with Green Bay as a Plan B free agent in 1989.

Campen impressed the Packers with his versatility. He was an emergency defensive lineman and a third tight end in certain situations. And he had a zeal for learning as much as he could about the game; something that always impresses coach Lindy Infante.

Finally, he had his chance last season when 1989 starting center Blair Bush told Infante he'd relish a role as a backup. But the Packers weren't completely sold on Campen because of his inexperience as a starter. And they wondered about his excess energy. So it wasn't a surprise when they signed veteran George Yarno as a Plan B free agent. He was their insurance policy just in case Campen couldn't either handle the pressure or imploded during an emotional outburst.

"They did everything to make sure they were covered," said Campen, whose laugh proved it didn't bother him. "Hey, I wasn't going to mess up my chance. I had three years to wait for it. I was well-prepared for when the bombs started falling."

Campen credited Bush, an excellent communicator who taught him all the tricks of the trade, for his ability to fit into the offense so quickly.

"I had almost a third coach, if you will, in Blair Bush. He was on the sidelines helping me all the time. He was a big reason why I had a pretty good year," Campen said. "I'd come off and he'd tell me what was right and what was wrong. I'd ask his opinions on things or I'd come out of a huddle and look for him on the sideline and he'd give me a hand signal on something to do, like stay low or something to that effect."

Campen is a careful listener as he gets a "briefing" from offensive line coach Charlie Davis on the sidelines during a respite from the action.

Once Campen proved he had the savvy to handle the physical part of the game, he still had to assure the Packers he could handle the emotional aspects.

"I knew they were worried about me getting too hyper out there," he said. "Sometimes I just lose it. Like in practices. If I lost in a one-on-one pass block it was like my world was coming to an end. I had to learn to control that.

"That had to be a question mark in their mind. What if he gets beat in a game. He'll go into the tank and try to kill somebody. Or will he be able to get rid of the play and go on to the next one.

"That's another area where Blair became a big help. If I made a mistake he was always there to say, 'The hell with it, go on to the next one.'"

Campen thought about the last time he really lost his cool. "Every once in a while I'll lose it. I have to get beat really bad," he said. Or get poked in the eye.

By the end of training camp there was no question that Campen deserved to start. He was picking up more situations on the playing field and had channeled his energy into a positive situation. Campen suddenly felt like he was walking on a cloud as he awaited his name to be announced with the starting lineup in the Packers' season opening victory over the Los Angeles Rams at Lambeau Field.

"I was just in awe of running through that line the first time," he said. "My parents came out from California for that first game and then getting your name introduced and hearing the crowd was pretty intense."

The intensity didn't disappear on the football field. As wild as Campen may have been from whistle to whistle throughout the season, his rpm's were in the red line during the first four of five games.

Earlier, Campen said players can be either an ass, a nice guy or an animal on the football field. In Campen's case, he thinks he knows what label the opposition pinned on him. Let's put it this way, it doesn't consider him a nice guy and probably not an animal.

"They probably think I'm an ass because I like to hustle," he said. "I'm one of those guys who like to get the last shove in. I don't know why but I always play to the whistle. If I don't hear a whistle I'm going to keep pushing. I don't care. A lot of guys don't appreciate that. The ball may be 20 yards downfield and I'm still pushing the guy I'm blocking because I haven't heard the whistle. So I'm going to keep pounding on him and wear him out."

Campen remembered when he met up with Chicago's Mike Singletary during the second meeting of the Packers and Bears last year in Chicago. Singletary teasingly tried to calm him down.

"I was still out there the first couple of games wetting my pants because I was new to starting and I kept playing to the whistle and we singled up a couple of times," Campen said. "He'd yell at the end of the play, 'It's over youngster, relax, relax.'

"But he knew. He goes 100 miles an hour. And he did it when he was a younger player. He'd go diving through stuff. He doesn't do it as much anymore. Maybe it's because he's older, wiser and wants to save his hits."

Campen said he could never envision himself saving a hit. "If something, God forbid, happened to me and I couldn't play anymore, I want to make sure that I went 150 miles an hour on that last play," he said.

Campen thought some more about how football is played today and recognized something wrong with it.

"Sometimes I wonder if hustle is starting to become extinct in football," he said. "Everything is so diagrammed. You have to step this way or that way. All that stuff is important because you have to be in the right spot to make the play work. But after you get there it's the extra effort and the hustle aspect that can make a play extra special.

"You never know if you're running downfield and a receiver makes a cut and the ball pops out a funny way, you need an extra person to fall on it or make an extra block. It might never happen, but that one time might be in the Super Bowl. So you try to develop those kind of habits."

Campen, as well as the Packer coaching staff, is hoping that his success as a center becomes a habit.

"We hope he takes the next step this year and becomes even better," said Infante.

Count on it, said Campen.

"When I finally started last year it was like after four years I had figured out that I had made it. I got to where my ultimate goal was. And once you attain a goal, you go for the next one. That's just human nature," he said.

The next goal? "I'd like to go to Hawaii like the other top centers," he said. "I'd like to make some more all-pro teams."

And continue to have fun running up and down the field scaring the daylights out of the opposition as the center of attention.

"Anybody who would want to trade this job for anything has to be crazy," said Campen. "I mean I'm sure other professional athletes feel the same way, but nothing replaces those three hours on the field each Sunday. It's incredible. I think the only thing that beat it, only by a little bit, was my kid being born. That was pretty special."

Campen looked back at the past year and shook his head in amazement. He had a good year on the field and his wife, Charlene, gave birth to a daughter, Kirstie, this spring. The package is now complete.

"I'm having fun in practice, fun in games, fun in life," said Campen. "It's amazing to me that there aren't more like me playing the game considering all the money we make just to have fun. I'd like to see a few more smiles."

If Campen doesn't find them on the field, he can always look up into the stands at Lambeau Field because the fans there will always be smiling at the Packers' lethal weapon who is always in the center of everything.

Bracing Athletic Injuries

James H. Taillon, C.O.

Ever since Broadway Joe Namath wore a Lenox Hill™ knee brace as he led the New York Jets to a Superbowl victory, there has been an interest in what braces can do for athletes.

Properly designed braces can allow you to continue playing (or working) under circumstances that might have kept you on the sidelines not too long ago.

The choice of what type of brace can help a person is not an easy one. The first person to consult is your physician. If he or she agrees that a brace will be medically helpful, an orthotist will work with you to design and produce an orthosis (brace) that fits properly and provides the stability and protection needed for you to function at your best.

Braces can be designed for almost any activity. The most common types of braces used by athletes are knee braces and foot braces (orthotics or arch supports). This reflects the high incidence of injuries to these areas. In basketball and hockey it is not uncommon to design protection for the face, in particular the eyes and nose.

All sports can produce back and neck injuries. These must be treated by your doctor first! If bracing is indicated, there are a wide variety of options available that will allow you to keep on 'playing.'

For more information about how braces can help you, contact your physician or call The Brace Centers, Ltd. at (414) 432-4909.

It Became TITLETOWN IN '61

Art Daley
Editor Emeritus

Green Bay was known as Titletown USA 30 years ago.

The year was 1961, the date was December 31 and the Packers were playing their first National Football League championship game right in their own back yard.

Sure, the Packers were host to the 1939 championship game but, horrors, it was held in Milwaukee. The locals were hot about that for the next 20 years.

Best of all, Big Town was the Packers' opponent in both title games and in each case the Packers slaughtered the New York Giants – 27 to 0 in 1939 and 37 to 0 in 1961.

The salad days of the Packers' legendary Vincent T. Lombardi seemed to officially start with that game in what was known as City Stadium, later to become Lambeau Field.

Yes, Curly Lambeau, founder and first coach of the Pack, had his salad days too, some 60 years ago, but the Packers' domination of pro football under Lombardi in the 1960s really blossomed in the playoff massacre.

Lombardi came to Green Bay in 1959 and immediately turned a 1-10-1 loser into a 7-5 winner. His men reached the 1960 championship game in Phila-delphia but lost a great battle 17-13.

Thus, Green Bay had a pretty good reputation in the Western Division and Lombardi was becoming a big noise as the 1961 season unfolded. The Giants replaced the Philadelphia Eagles as the champions of the Eastern loop. The NFL went to a 14-game schedule that year and the Packers posted a 11-3 record while the Giants came home with 10-3-1.

The two teams met twice that year and Green Bay won both by scores of 20-17. The first was a pre-season game in Green Bay and the second was game 12 in Milwaukee--a fierce battle that was decided in the fourth quarter when Jess Whittenton actually stole the ball out of Alex Webster's hands to set up the winning touchdown and clinch the Western championship.

The

With Packer quarterback Bart Starr as an interested spectator on this occasion, halfback Paul Hornung delivers a rare pass in the 1961 NFL Championship game against the New York Giants—the first title game ever played in Green Bay. The pass was incomplete but Hornung had a memorable day overall, leading the Packers in rushing with 89 yards in 20 attempts, catching 3 passes for 47 yards and tied an NFL Championship game record by scoring 19 points, as the Packers smothered the Giants, 37-0, for their seventh NFL title. Both Starr and Hornung—as well as tackle Forrest Gregg (75), on the turf in the foreground—are now members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Tight end Ron Kramer (88) played a major role in the Packer victory. The game's leading receiver with four catches for 80 yards, he is shown scoring one of his two touchdowns despite the efforts of the Giants' Sam Huff (70) and Jim Patton to "detain" him.

eyes of pro football then turned to Green Bay for what was to be a classic rematch. The Packers were established as a three-point favorite.

Could the Packers beat the Giants a third time in the same season?

Lombardi thought so. This was historic or maybe hysteric. No coach, before or since, had ever predicted his team would beat his opponent in any championship game--or any game for that matter.

After practice on Tuesday Lombardi told the media that "if the field is right, we'll win." After the Saturday drill Lombardi was reminded of his Tuesday remark. His answer: "Nothing has happened all week to change my mind."

If the field was right? The temps hovered around zero during most of the practice week, but the gridiron was covered by a tarpaulin, a foot of hay and a covering of snow. The rabbits in the area never had it so good. An electric heating grid was installed under the turf several years later.

The practice field near the stadium was a different story. It was frozen solid and the players wore tennis shoes. The weather didn't bother the Packer diehards. As many as 500 turned out for the practices during the week.

It was a hectic week. Most businesses in town answered the phone with a crisp "Beat the Giants" or "Titletown USA." League officials moved into town on Tuesday and the New York media followed. It was a quiet and peaceful week for the working visitors since the streets are rolled up promptly at 11 o'clock—about the time the bowling alleys empty. Seriously, it was a great week for the City of Green Bay since the city and its inhabitants received unlimited attention.

All seats in the 38,699-seat stadium sold at $10 per--a stiff price at the time, and it was a sellout by Thursday when the temps hit 20 below. The final attendance was 39,029 and, with television income, this became the first million dollar playoff game.

A master at keeping his players in the right frame of mind, Lombardi was upbeat all week. He continually complimented his players in practice--somewhat of a switch, although he was never as mean as some folks thought. There was no tension. Two defensive stars, Bill Quinlan and Whittenton, went to the hospital Tuesday to sweat out heavy colds.

Also, three of the club's stars had been weekend players since October 22 when they were called into military service. Paul Hornung was at Fort Riley, Kansas, Ray Nitschke and Boyd Dowler were at Fort Lewis, WA. However, they each received a week's furlough to get ready for the game.

As a safeguard for the Packs' kicking game, old Ben Agajanian, 42, the kicking specialist out of Long Beach, CA, was brought in. Ben wound up handling the kickoffs. Hornung booted field goals and extra points.

The Giants, led by Coach Allie Sherman and quarterback Y.A. Tittle and his great receiver, Del Shofner, came in on Friday when the temps leaped up 20 degrees to zero. They also received the news that the temperature for game time would be 21 above and little wind. Ironically, a year later these same two teams met in New York and it was colder, 10 above and with a windchill of 47 below.

The game? It was a shambles. No contest. It was virtually over when the Packers scored 24 points in the second quarter, then added 10 in the third period.

The late Tex Maule of Sports Illustrated wrote that this was the first time in NFL history that one team so dominated another in a championship game. He explained:

"The Bears, of course, demolished the Washington Redskins in that 73-0 rout long ago but the Bears were helped by a new offense. The Packer domination of the Giants was simply because they blocked and tackled better than a good team which was blocking and tackling well."

The numbers told the story. The Pack had 19 first downs, the Giants six. Green Bay gained 181 yards on the ground, the Giants 31. The Pack had 63 offensive plays, the Giants 43.

Individually, Hornung set a playoff record with 19 points on six-yard TD run, three field goals and four PATs. He also led the team in rushing with 89 yards in 20 carries while Jim Taylor, bad back and all, posted 69 in 14. Bart Starr threw three TD's passes, two to Ron Kramer and one to Dowler. The Pack had four interceptions--one each by Hank Gremminger, Herb Adderley, Nitschke and Whittenton.

The carnage started on the first play of the second quarter when Hornung scored to climax an 80-yard drive in 11 plays.

Now the defense took over to set up two quick TDs. Nitschke intercepted Tittle to give the Pack position on the Giant 34. Six plays later Starr passed 13 yards to Dowler for a TD. Three plays later Gremminger intercepted Tittle to set the Pack in motion on the Giant 36. After a quick eight plays Starr passed 14 yards to Kramer for a 21-0 lead.

Old Charley Conerly replaced the bewildered Tittle at QB and led the Giants on a 55-yard drive to the Packer six where the Pack held and took over on downs. It was the Giants' only real drive of the day. The Packers went on a 70-yard drive to set up a 17-yard field goal by Hornung for a 24-0 lead as time ran out in the half.

The third quarter started as a dogfight until Joe Morrison fumbled a Dowler punt and Forrest Gregg recovered on the Giant 22. Hornung kicked a 22-yard field goal for 27-0. Then the Giants interfered with Willie Wood on a fair catch and the Pack started a TD drive from the New York 43. Five plays later Starr passed 13 yards to Kramer to set the score at 34-0. Early in the fourth quarter Whittenton intercepted a Tittle pass and Hornung promptly kicked a field goal from the 19.

The crowd was delirious. The late Red Smith, the great sports columnist from New York, described what Lombardi did in those final minutes:

"As the fourth period shivered away, he (Vince) began substituting for the heroes one by one. Thus, at spaced intervals, Hornung would trot to the bench while the multitude arose with deafening cheers, then Taylor would get his standing ovation all by himself, then Starr."

Before the press arrived after the game, Lombardi told his troops: "You're the greatest team in the National Football League today, and I mean it."

Other Lombardi quotes: "We had a little poise today, which we didn't have a year ago (in Philly). We were tense that day. Actually, we did things that we'd been doing all season."

Hornung? "He played a tremendous game, but that's been his history. The bigger the game the better he plays. He's a great competitor."

Hornung was named the game's most valuable player and won the Corvette. Paul's reaction? "Give all the credit to the offensive line and that man sitting right over there." He was pointing to Starr, a coach on the field.

The Giants' Sherman didn't have much to say, explaining, "It was just one of those days. The Packers are an excellent team and they just took advantage of opportunities presented to them." In up-to date parlance those opportunities are called turnovers.

Pete Rozelle, then the NFL's new commissioner, complimented the Pack and noted that "this was a true test. The field was a normal field." Thus, the tarp, hay and snow had left the field October soft.

To make the victory even more noteworthy, Lombardi received this telegram:

"Congratulations on a Great Game Today. It was a Fine Victory for a Great Coach, a Great Team and a Great Town. Best Regards, President John F. Kennedy."

And so it went 30 years ago—a season and a day to remember in Green Bay. And do you know some of those Titletown USA stickers and pennants still show up on occasion?

Jubilant Packer loyalists flash happy smiles as they celebrate their way out of what was then known as "New" City Stadium (it was named Lambeau Field in 1965). Three of their number, astride the crossbar, were already beginning the traditional custom of tearing down the goal post—which later was paraded through the streets of downtown Green Bay.

WILSON'S A WINNER

Sharon Raboin
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Charles Wilson considers himself the steal of the NFL draft.

Wilson said it without hesitation, without cockiness. He said it with confidence, and confidence is a trademark of his.

A wide receiver and kickoff returner out of Memphis State, Wilson was selected by the Green Bay Packers in the fifth round of the 1990 draft.

"The people they drafted before me–the first five–I really didn't think they were better than me," said Wilson. "I felt I was as good as them or better than them, to be honest, as far as all-around talent. I think I produced more than the five guys drafted before me."

The Packers selected linebacker Tony Bennett and running back Darrell Thompson in the first round, cornerback Leroy Butler in the second round, linebacker Bobby Houston in the third round and tight end Jackie Harris in the fourth round.

"I feel like if a team wants to win, they'll put the ball in Charles Wilson's hands as much as possible," Wilson said.

That is a bold statement to make.

But Wilson, explosive and elusive in the open field, made some big plays last season.

Wilson finished fifth in the National Football League in kickoff returns. Football News made him one of their all-rookie selections.

"I want to be No. 1 – the top dog," said Wilson, whose hobbies are collecting gold and shoes. "I want Charles Wilson to be a household name in years to come."

Wilson played sparingly at wide receiver behind Sterling Sharpe, Perry Kemp, Jeff Query and Clarence Weathers. But when he got a chance – replacing the injured Weathers late in the season against the Detroit Lions – Wilson caught five passes for 60 yards. The temperature during the game was 2 degrees, minus-35 wind chill, the coldest home game since the storied Dec. 31, 1967 Ice Bowl.

"I wish I would have gotten more opportunities to play receiver," Wilson said. "I think I showed I could play against Detroit when my opportunity came."

But the chance almost never happened.

Wilson was forced to miss his senior season because of an academic snafu. He was considered a draft risk despite a successful junior season in which he was one of the top kickoff returners in the nation, averaging a school-record 24.5 yards a return. He had a 97-yard touchdown return against Tulane. Also he caught 33 passes for 554 yards and two touchdowns.

Wilson setting sail on one of his 35 kickoff returns in 1990, made an impact as a rookie, finishing a lofty third in the National Football Conference KOR statistics with a 22.8-yard average.

The Packers were familiar with Wilson because wide receivers coach Buddy Geis had worked with him as a freshman and sophomore at Memphis State.

"After summer school, we were going into camp and I found out that one of the classes I took didn't count," Wilson said. "I was eligible by the NCAA, but I wasn't eligible school-wise. I had expected to be a high draft pick, and to all of a sudden have this thrown in my face - it was like being shot.

"I felt my whole career go right past me. I felt like I might not get a chance to make it in the NFL."

Wilson played basketball to keep in shape, and worried about what his future held. He faced a tough decision, one that would change the course of his life: Should he apply to enter the draft or return to school?

"I had agents and scouts asking me what I was going to do," Wilson said. "My coaches were trying to persuade me to go back to school. It was like a tug-of-war. I had a long talk with myself, and decided to come out. The opportunity looked right."

Wilson said he believes he made the right decision.

"Looking back, I think it was a good decision to forego my final college season," Wilson said. "I made the team. I produced. I proved that I wasn't a wasted draft pick by the Packers."

Despite sitting out a season, Wilson was able to make an immediate impact.

"It was like riding a bicycle," Wilson said. "Once you learn, it's always there. When I first came up, I was real rusty. But I still had the ability, and I still had the know-how. It just took me awhile to get back in the swing."

Wilson returned 35 kickoffs for 798 yards and a 22.8 average, the best by a Packers player since Aundra Thompson averaged 23.1 in 1979. His longest return was just 36 yards, which is a reflection of his consistency. He was able to maintain a high average without ever breaking one. His achievement was one of the bright spots in a disappointing season for the Packers.

"Everybody on the team has a job to do," Wilson said. "That was my primary job here. I took great pride in returning kickoffs and being a flyer on the punt team."

At 5-foot-9 and 175 pounds, Wilson showed remarkable toughness and aggressiveness when he covered punt returns. Wilson was a gunner, lining up wide at the line of scrimmage.

"A big surprise for us," said Geis.

"He was aggressive, quick at the line of scrimmage. You don't use receivers at that position a lot."

Of the special teams players, Wilson was second in total tackles with 17, 13 unassisted. Jackie Harris was first with 22 total tackles.

This season Wilson and Query are expected to challenge Kemp for the starting flanker position opposite Sharpe.

Wilson has good hands and breakaway speed. He can make things happen after catching the ball, and has no fear of going over the middle. What he needs is repetition to improve his techniques.

"He has the capability of being one of our starters," Geis said. "If he can get the same techniques as Perry Kemp, Clarence Weathers and Sterling Sharpe, it will be tough to keep him out of the lineup."

Wilson, filling in for the injured Clarence Weathers, launches his bid for a starting job in 1991 with a strong performance in the Packers' regular season home finale against the Detroit Lions in Lambeau Field. Exhibiting a good "touch" on the day when the wind chill plunged to 35 degrees below zero, he caught five passes for 60 yards.

Cornerback Jerry Holmes is off on a 33-yard fumble recovery run—the Packers' longest of the season— to the Rams' 4-yard line after recovering a fumble by Henry Ellard in the fourth quarter of the season opener. Two plays later, Brent Fullwood scored what proved to be the winning touchdown—in a 36-24 victory—on a two-yard run.

Strong safety Mark Murphy, here drawing bead on Kansas City receiver Robb Thomas, led the Packer defense in tackles in 1990 for the third straight year. Murphy, who also tied for the team lead in interceptions with three, was involved in 128 stops overall, his total including a career-high 103 solos.

PACKERS WERE PERFECT GENTLEMEN

There are some things as rare as a day in June. Like, for example, a penalty-free performance.

The Packers enjoyed such a singular afternoon statistically during the 1990 season, emerging from their November 25 contest with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers at Milwaukee County Stadium without being whistled for an infraction.

It marked the first time in 13 years that they have gone penalty-free for a full game, the last occasion having been November 27, 1977 when they went without a violation in a 13-6 loss to the Minnesota Vikings in Green Bay's Lambeau Field.

The Buccaneers, it turns out, were somewhat less circumspect than the Green and Gold in the face of the Packers' flawless conduct, drawing six penalties for 48 yards.

Wide receiver Jeff Query, who emerged as the Packers' No. 3 receiver in his second pro season, is about to pull in a 47-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Anthony Dilweg. It was the Green and Gold's first touchdown of the day, helping propel them to a 35-24 victory over the Rams.

Onrushing Brian Noble closes in on Tampa Bays' quarterback Vinny Testaverde in the second quarter of their November 25 visit to Milwaukee County Stadium.

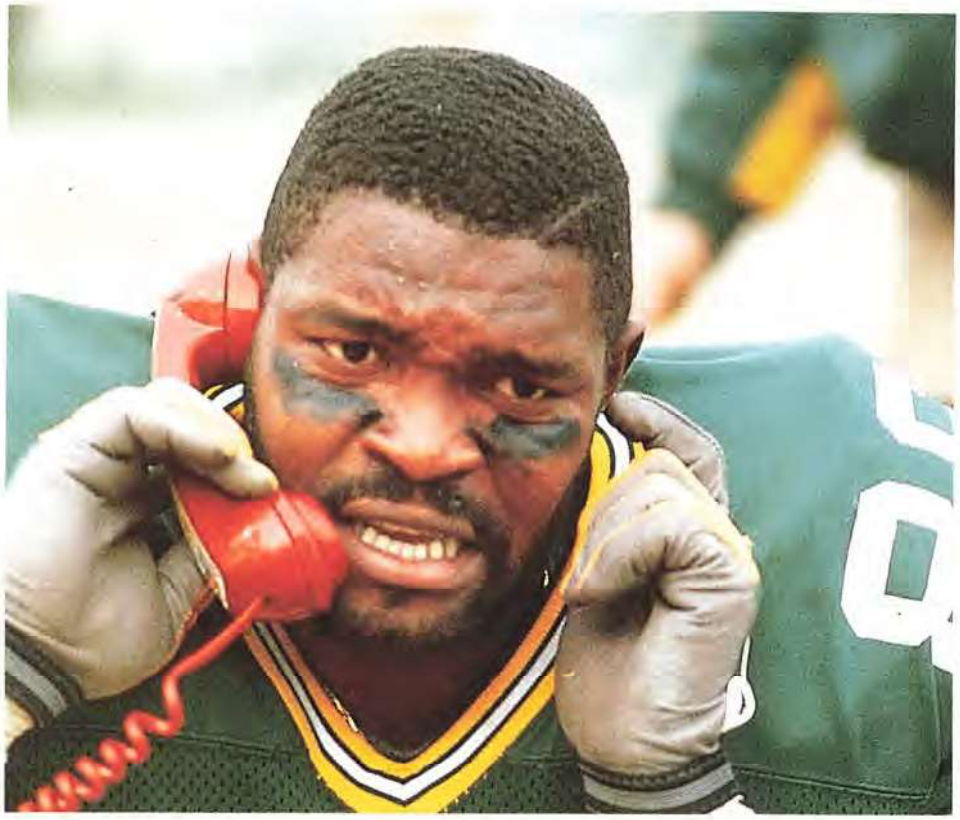
Rookie Leroy Butler assesses situation after making his third interception of the season in the Detroit game at Lambeau Field December 30. It enabled the Florida State star to tie Mark Murphy and Jerry Holmes for team season honors.



Ed West, on the "hot line" to the press box, invaded the Packers' All-Time Top 20 in receiving last season. His 27 catches tied him with Howie Ferguson (1953-58) for 20th place with 127 receptions. His five touchdowns also padded his career point total to 120, making him the second highest tight end in team annals, ranking him behind only Paul Coffman (322).

PACKER 'HALL' WELCOMES TRIO

Honored by 'Hall': Harry Jacunski and Jan Stenerud display their Packer Hall of Fame plaques during induction ceremonies February 9. Also shown are Colleen Barnett, left and Patricia Collins, who hold the plaque posthumously awarded to their late father, attorney Gerald Clifford, the Packer's first legal counsel and member of the legendary "Hungry Five" who guided the Packers through some early financial and legal crises in the 1920's and '30's.

Inductions of Stenerud, Jacunski and Clifford swell roster to 103

✦ The most celebrated placekicker in pro football history.

✦ The "other end" to the legendary Don Hutson.

✦ And a behind-the-scenes pioneer who played a largely unsung but major role in keeping the Packers afloat through the first quarter century of their existence.

Jan Stenerud, Harry Jacunski and Gerald Clifford by name, they became the latest members of the Green Bay Packer Hall of Fame during the shrine's 21st annual induction dinner last February.

For all, including the daughters of Clifford (Colleen Barnett and Patricia Collins) who represented the former Packer vice president at the ceremonies, it was a memorable moment. But for Stenerud, who kicked more field goals (373) than any man in pro football history and is the second highest scorer in NFL history (1,699 points), it was a particularly special time. Only two weeks earlier, he learned he also had been elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in the class of 1991, in company with Earl Campbell, John Hannah, Stan Jones and Tex Schramm.

On this occasion, however, his focus was on Green Bay, the Packers and the honor he was receiving. Although he had spent the bulk of his career—13 seasons—with the Kansas City Chiefs, Stenerud attributed his election to the Canton shrine largely to his four-year hitch with the Packers.

"If I hadn't gone to Green Bay, I had absolutely no chance whatsoever (for Canton)," the Norwegian-born former ski jumper said. "People in Kansas City hardly know what you did in Green Bay or Minnesota (he spent his last two seasons with the Vikings), and very few people realize my numbers in the '80s were better than what I had in the '60s."

His statistical record bears out Stenerud's contention. In his 45-game tenure with the Packers, he compiled an imposing 80.82 efficiency percentage, making 59 of 73 field goal attempts, compared to figures in the 60 percentiles while with the Chiefs in the late '60s and the '70s.

In the process, Jan set a Packer single season efficiency record in 1981 (91.67 per cent), connecting on 22 of 24 FG attempts. Stenerud who, despite his relatively brief stay in Green Bay, is the eleventh-ranking scorer in Packer history with 292 points, also established another Green Bay record by kicking 67 consecutive points after touchdown.

A native of Fetsund, Norway, where he was the nation's sixth-ranking ski jumper at the age of 18 before coming to Montana State University on a skiing scholarship, Stenerud paid eloquent tribute in his enshrinement response.

"If you play pro football and you've never played in Green Bay," he said, "you've missed a lot. There's no other place like it."

The 75-year-old Jacunski, who played college football at Fordham with Vince Lombardi and the "Seven Blocks of Granite," helped the Packers win their fifth and sixth NFL championships in 1939 and 1944.

Personally, with the incomparable Hutson at the opposite flank, the for-

WALL OF FAME

What could be more appropriate, more fitting, than a "wall of fame" in Green Bay's Lambeau Field?

Bob Harlan, the Packers' president and chief executive officer, came to this conclusion during the offseason while reflecting upon the Green and Gold's impressive accomplishments and rich tradition.

They have, after all, won more championships—eleven—than any other team in professional football history and remain the only team to have won three consecutive titles, a feat they have engineered not once but twice.

And only the Chicago Bears, among their National Football League peers, have more representatives in the Pro Football Hall of Fame than the Packers, who have 18 former players and coaches enshrined in the Canton, OH, museum.

As might be expected, in light of these lustrous "credentials," Harlan had no trouble selling the project to the Packer Executive Committee, which promptly gave it unanimous approval. The "wall of fame" thus has become a green and gold reality in 1991. The names of the 18 football legends, and the years they were with the Packers, are prominently displayed in gold letters on the green inner walls of Lambeau Field, between the second and third levels of the private boxes on both sides of the stadium.

E. L. "Curly" Lambeau and Vince Lombardi, who between them directed the Packers to all eleven of those championships, have their names inscribed on the facade of the stadium's east private boxes, along with those of Don Hutson, Johnny "Blood" McNally, Tony Canadeo, Willie Davis, Arnie Herber, Ray Nitschke, Bart Starr and Jim Taylor.

mer Yale standout said he had found himself laboring in relative obscurity.

"I was essentially the "other' end," he said, adding, "Bear Bryant, Don's teammate from Alabama, coined the expression during their careers at Alabama. Everybody knew who Don Hutson was. Nobody knew who the other end was.

"Ninety per cent of the passes were aimed at Don Hutson," Jacunski said. "He deserved it, too. I was more the equivalent of a tight end. I blocked on offense and rushed the heck out of the passer on defense."

The engagingly modest Jacunski made other significant contributions to the cause himself, however, catching 52 passes for 985 yards—an impressive 18.9-yard average—and six touchdowns.

Clifford, longtime Packer corporation counsel and officer, was inducted posthumously by Circuit Judge William Duffy of Green Bay.

The veteran attorney, who died in 1951 at the age of 63, was a member of the "Hungry Five," which guided the team through its early and formative years. The others were E. L."Curly" Lambeau, the Packers' first head coach, A.B.Turnbull, the team's first president, Lee Joannes and Dr. W. W. Kelly.

Duffy, recalling that Clifford was instrumental in keeping the Packers operative financially in the '40s, said, "As an attorney, he stalled off the creditors when they (the Packers) went into receivership until the team came out of it.

"He drafted the articles of incorporation, reducing the temptation of ever moving the franchise."

Clifford, who was born in Chilton, WI, and attended high school in Escanaba, MI, also was noted for the season ticket drives he personally spearheaded into northern Wisconsin and the Upper Peninsula.

Enshrinement of the trio brings the total number of inductees to 103.

The names of the Packers' eight other Canton enshrinees—Herb Adderley, Forrest Gregg, Clarke Hinkle, Paul Hornung, Cal Hubbard, Mike Michalske, Jim Ringo and Willie Wood—have been placed at the same level on the wall of the west private boxes, four on each side of the press box.

The Packers' championship years—1929-30-31, 1936, 1939, 1944, 1961-62 and 1965-66-67—are emblazoned on the wall above the club seats in the south end zone. Also, of course, in "Packer" gold.

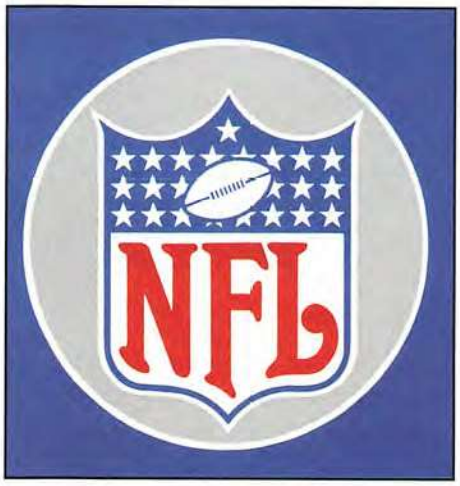
League Section



'ROOM AT THE TOP'

Is there "room at the top" in the NFC Central Division?

Four of its five tenants—the Packers, Lions, Vikings and Bucs—would like to think so. They are, understandably, tired of looking up at the Chicago Bears in the division penthouse, which the highly territorial Monsters of the Midway have occupied for six of the past seven seasons.

As defending champions, the Bears again are the team to beat by virtue of that distinction. The difference, with respect to the National Football League's 1991 season and the Central race, may be in the perception that the division is approaching artistic parity.

Packer Coach Lindy Infante struck this note in assessing the situation. "Unless you've got some kind of crystal ball," he said, "I don't know how you'd predict it. The year before (in 1989), both Minnesota and ourselves were 10-and-6, and last year Chicago comes back and has a great year and all the rest of us falter.

"I can see anybody in our division jumping out there and winning it. I do think that it will be a lot closer race this year than it was last year. I think Chicago kind of had it locked up awful early last year. I think that this year it will be a lot more competitive.

"I would hope that we would get our act together," Infante added, "and I think Minnesota certainly has a chance to do that at their place. And Detroit is another up-and-coming football team. And Tampa Bay started off real strong last year and then faltered as they went on . . . So I think it's going to be an interesting race."

For the Packers, getting their "act together" would end a 19-year drought, their most recent division championship having come in 1972, when they forged a 10-4 record.

In The Game Against Cystic Fibrosis, Winning IS Everything
Cystic Fibrosis kills children. It deprives them of their hopes... their dreams...their future. It takes them out of the game before they have a chance to play.
But for many, the game isn't over...and there's still a chance. You are a key player...and it's time for you to go in and make a contribution. Time for you to run up the score against Cystic Fibrosis.
Join the Green Bay Packer's 65 Roses Club now. TODAY. Because we can still win. And because it means so much.

PACKER-BEAR 'HAPPENING' SPICES SCHEDULE

Any time the Packers exchange pleasantries with the Chicago Bears on the playing field, fans of either persuasion will be quick to tell you, it is a certified "happening."

In part, of course, because the immemorial enemies have squared off no fewer than 141 times over their venerable rivalry—more often than any other two teams in National Football League history.

In part, because of the mutual antipathy the principals display for each other when they chance to collide on the turf—and it matters not whether it be Green Bay's Lambeau Field or Chicago's Soldier Field.

And, it should be noted, this year's first encounter between the primordial enemies will have two intriguing and additional dimensions, adding a particularly festive air to the occasion.

Their 142nd collision will occur on prime time national TV—via Turner Network Television—for the first time since 1986.

And it will be staged on Thursday night (October 17) in Lambeau Field, a development which will mark the Packers' first Thursday night appearance ever on national television.

The Green and Gold's 1991 regular season schedule has another significant distinction. The Packers' inaugural against the Philadelphia Eagles in "Lambeau" Sunday afternoon, September 1, will be the earliest in their 72-year NFL history.

Their earliest previous opener occurred in 1984 when they opened against the then St. Louis Cardinals on September 2, a day on which the Packers made Forrest Gregg's debut as their head coach a happy one with a 24-23 victory over the Big Red.

Another highlight of the Packers' 1991 agenda will find the American Football Conference champion Buffalo Bills—coming off a dramatic "near miss" against the New York Giants in Super Bowl XXV—making two Wisconsin appearances.

The first will have Jim Kelly, Bruce Smith and their fellow Bills providing the opposition in the Packers' sixth annual preseason showing at the University of Wisconsin's Camp Randall Stadium in Madison, WI, Saturday afternoon, August 17, a contest which will mark the Packers' first preseason appearance on national television (CBS in this case) since 1983.

Randall Cunningham, the Eagles All-Pro quarterback, had a combined 4,408 yards in passing and rushing in 1990.

The Bills later will play a return engagement in the regular season, when they visit Milwaukee County Stadium for a November 10 matchup.

The Packers launch their '91 exertions Saturday, August 3, when they entertain the New England Patriots in the 31st Bishop's Charities Game, after which they are booked into the New Orleans Superdome against the Saints Saturday night, August 10.

Following the August 17 exercise against the Bills, the Green and Gold close out preseason operations against the Cincinnati Bengals in the 42nd Midwest Shrine game at Milwaukee Saturday night, August 24th.

The first four games of the regular season find the Packers following a uniform, home-away pattern. After hosting the Eagles in the September 1 opener, they visit the Pontiac, MI, Silverdome for their 122nd meeting with the Detroit Lions Sunday, September 8th.

Then it is back to Lambeau Field to entertain the ever intractable Tampa Bay Buccaneers, followed by a trip to Miami for a September 22 contest with Florida's other NFL representatives, the Dolphins.

The Green and Gold will be "on the road again" the following Sunday, moving into Anaheim Stadium for a match with Jim Everett and the Los Angeles Rams.

The Packers next make their regular season bow at County Stadium, hosting the resurgent Dallas Cowboys Sunday, October 6, before drawing a scheduled bye the following week, October 13th.

The latter should provide the Green and Gold with ample time to heal their wounds and hone their game for the highly anticipated October 17 showdown against the Bears.

A 10-day hiatus will follow that assignment, after which the Packers will make two consecutive road appearances—at Tampa Sunday, October 27 and against the New York Jets at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, NJ, Sunday, November 3.

Next up will be a welcome, three-game home stand. It will find the Green and Gold hosting the Bills in County Stadium, November 10, the Vikings in Green Bay, November 17, and the Indianapolis Colts in their final Milwaukee appearance of the season, November 24.

Three road appearances in the final four weeks will cap the Packers' regular season agenda. They will visit Atlanta December 1, then invade Chicago's Soldier Field for a 143rd matchup with the Bears December 8 before returning to Lambeau Field Sunday, December 15 to take on the Lions in what could be a "replay" of 1990's "Ice Bowl II," which saw the wind chill plunge to 35 below zero for last year's December 22 meeting with the Lions.

The Packers then will close out the schedule against a third consecutive NFC Central opponent when they visit the Minneapolis Metrodome–which will be the site of Super Bowl XXVI January 26–to face the Vikings Sunday, December 21.
